2d—His incorruptible integrity. It was an accepted fact that nothing could induce him to swerve from the path of rectitude and of strict moral uprightness. He stood by the truth as he understood it and lived in all good conscience before his fellow men. There were times when he might have been a gainer at the expense of other people's interests. But his regard for what was fair and right led him to give counsel with reference to other interests than his own. The consequence is, that though he may not have left so large a fortune, he has left behind him that good name which is rather to be chosen than great riches.

3d—His gentleness of spirit, which made him so pleasant as a friend. There was an absence of all severity and harshness and haughtiness. Rarely indeed was he stirred to anger or resentment. He was a man of warm hearted sympathy, preferring always to do a kindness rather than utter a criticism, or provoke a contest. He was a man of peace, and if any think he loved peace too much, let them reflect how much better off the world would be if there were more in it that loved freedom from strife and division, from discord and turbulence as well, and taged to promote good understanding between men as earnestly as he.

4th His intelligent, stable Christian faith. This I mention last, and yet it was out of this that the traits already mentioned grew—or out of this that they received new development and strength. It was his faith in his Savior and his wish to please him that gave to our brother the sobriety, the integrity, the gentleness of spirit which he is with him such prominent traits. He was strengthened and upheld by religion purer and more decided natural virtue, in which he did not wish to be at all boasting. "Lastly, say, as his loveliness heard the last mortal rattle, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant.' Enter into the joy of thy Lord.' The impression left behind by such a life is that it has been a consistent one, and that Christ added strong testimony to the truth and value of that which he more than once declared, that impressions would be left behind which would outlast our passage to and fro in this world, and outlast our mortality, as it was taught. The majority of souls of those in this world are very precious, the saving power of a trusted friend and Savior was manifest in the manner of his dying, his peace and trying patience. He was enabled to bear testimony to the reality of religion. All yet was whether last with all he had to bear, he had no reproach yet, not a wonder when it is remembered who was with him in the fiery furnace of affliction. He always asked that prayer should be offered, and showed his disappointment if for any reason it must be omitted. He proved himself at times offering touching petitions for the church to which he belonged, which petitions let us trust that God will answer, as well as those put upon behalf of such as he most dearly loved, the members of his family. When suffering from nervous prostration or when the mind wandered, as it did often, at the last, an appropriate promise drawn from the full storehouse of God's word, if spoken in his ear would cause his face to brighten and draw from him expressions which showed he understood and appreciated what was said. Nothing seemed to soothe him more than references to the goodness of his God and the greatness of his Savior. Only the day before the end, when lying on his bed, unbeknowing the presence of any observer he lifted his feeble hand and looking and pointing upward said in a tone of confidence, as if he actually saw his Lord, "I know you are the Son of God."

These evidences of faith, coming at the close of a life of faith, are a source of solid comfort. It is pleasant to dwell upon them. Yet they must be dismissed for the time and we must turn to the duty of committing to the earth this empty tabernacle, so recently the dwelling place of a spirit that has gone home. We can pause but for a brief moment longer, that we may gather at the lesson made ready for us by this life and death.

Dear friends of the home circle, brethren of the eldership, members of this church and other churches of Tecumseh, gentlemen of the bar of Lenawee, citizens of Tecumseh, we look our last to-day on a familiar form and bid adieu to a friendly presence that for so years has had here its home. Our friend, having served his own generation by the will of God, has fallen on sleep and is to be laid unto his fathers. We commit his body to the care of Him who is the Resurrection, and his soul to Him who is the life. We have no fear but that it is well with him. Death is not in itself to be desired, but then the righteous hath hope in his death. And such buoyant, joyous hopes associate themselves with this departure that we forget the grave in dwelling on them. Shall it be when we are called, that like hopes shall be our support, and cluster like golden clouds around the calm setting of our brief day? If we would have hope in death, we must lay the foundation now for such hope as will not perish then. And other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ. In the diverse occupations and the various cares which attend this mortal life, we are prone to forget that there is one thing needful, which if we would have a good part which shall not be taken from us, we must use the highest care to make our own. In the variety of human pursuits, any one of which faithfully followed, may secure an earthly competence, men are in danger of forgetting that there is but one way in which heavenly riches can be secured; those riches which abide forever, and that that way is through the exercise of faith in Jesus Christ—that same Jesus whom the Jews crucified, and whom the world with scorn rejects. There is but one narrow path, no matter what our condition in life may be, on which it is safe to walk, but one that will bring pilgrims of earth to a happy home in Heaven; and that is one which is marked out by Him who says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

The Bar Memorial.

The Lenawee county bar met in the court house Monday forenoon and after appropriate remarks by the members of the bar and amid much feeling passed the following memorial:

Edwin B. Wood came from the Western Reserve in Ohio to Hudson in the year 1847, where he studied law with Hon. J. C. Sawyer. In 1858 he went to Adrian and continued his reading in the office of the late Judge Beaman. In 1849 he removed to Tecumseh, and since that date Tecumseh has been his home. Here he continued his course of legal study in C. A. Stacy's office, and in 1852 was admitted to the bar. After his admission he formed a partnership with Judge Stacy and the legal firm of Stacy & Wood continued until 1862. Since that year he has practiced his profession on his own account. For thirty-two years he has been a member of the Lenawee county bar. By his decease the bar is bereft of one of its most honored members and the community in which he lived of a most estimable citizen.

When a great man dies the populace celebrate the event with funereal pomp; when an aged veteran drops into his grave the world honors him with fitting obsequies and moves on; when a child passes over the river the family friends weep; but when the life of a strong, manly, honest man is blotted out, in the prime of his usefulness and power, all the people mourn. Such a man was Edwin B. Wood.

He was a lawyer of the olden type—emphatically a peace maker. His talents and influence were devoted, not to aggravate strife and litigation, but to harmonize conflicting interests, and while protecting the rights of his clients, to transform litigant enemies into friends. His overwearing modesty frequently restrained him from assuming the position of an advocate, which he was well qualified to fill; but as a prudent and trusty counselor, as a painstaking lawyer, as a friend of the needy and oppressed, as a guardian and protector of the widow and the fatherless, his light shone with a brilliancy second to none. These traits of personal and professional character secured to him a large clientage and many steadfast friends. He enjoyed the respect of his brother attorneys, and the confidence of his clients. His reputation extended beyond the confines of the county, and for many years he led all his professional brethren in the extent and importance of his practice before the probate court.

His open generosity, his unflinching integrity, his warm hearted sympathy for those in trouble, gathered hosts of friends about him and bound them to him as with hooks of steel. His friendship was of the Damon and Pythias type. And when the people called him to official honor and power these bonds snapped asunder political ties, religious associations and partisan prejudice.

We are met to honor the memory of the deceased and to offer our testimony to his worth. We point to him as an example for young members of the bar to follow. We extend our sympathy to the stricken family in their affliction. We grieve with his neighbors over the dispensation which bears away forever a friend and worthy citizen. We shed our tears with those who loved him and reverently follow his remains to the tomb.

Let this feeble testimonial be spread upon the records of the circuit court, and let a copy thereof be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF E. D. ALLEN.

E. D. Allen, the veteran editor of the Morenci Observer, died at his home, in Morenci Saturday night, after a lingering illness.

The deceased was born in Farmington, township, Ontario Co., N. Y., May 4, 1825. His earlier education was acquired at the Canandaigua academy, and he afterward graduated at the state normal school at Albany. After his marriage he removed to Medina, this county, arriving here in 1848. In company with his brother, he conducted the old Medina mills and store for five or six years, when he removed to Brownville, Nebraska, and bought a farm. After a few years he returned to Michigan, settling in Morenci, where he first taught in the public schools, and published the Morenci Star till the war broke out. For nine years following he was bookkeeper of J. P. Cawley & Son. He afterward established the New Era at Morenci, selling the paper after three years to the Christian Advocate company, and at the same time entered the company's employ as publishing agent. Nine years ago he came back to Morenci and started the Observer.

Under his management the paper achieved a phenominal success as a rural newspaper, and since its inception the Observer has maintained a high rank among the journals of Southern Michigan. Bro. Allen was a man of strong convictions, an indomitable worker, possessed of a love for his profession. The members of the newspaper fraternity throughout the county will extend to the family their sincere sympathy in this season of affliction. Bro. Allen's sons have been brought up in the same business and they will continue the publication of the paper. The Observer has fallen into good hands.

SIR HERBERT STEWART.

Sir Herbert Stewart, the hero of the Soudan, who was wounded at the battle of Abu Klea Wells; is a most distinguished officer in her Majesty's service. He served in the capacity of Brigade Major of Cavalry in the Zulu war of 1879, and was present at the cavalry affair at Ezungayan. He was specially employed on the lines of communication after the breaking up of the Cavalry Brigadee He served as the principal staff officer to the Transyasl Field Force in the operations against Sekuni: and subsequently as Military Secretary and Chief of the Staff to Sir Garnet Wolseley, and went to South Africa on special service in Jan. 1881, serving in the Boer War as Assistant Adjutant and Quarter Master General. He was sent with Wolseley to the Soudan and succeeded in distinguishing himself at Gakdul and Abu Klea Wells. For this he was given the rank of Major General. He, with his small band of 1,150, made the march of 100 miles from Korti to Gakdul in less than sixty five hours. Upon his advancement the rebels everywhere fell back, not fighting until the affair at Abu Klea. In this engagement Col. Burnaby, one of the most gallant of the English officers, was killed, and, as before mentioned, Gen. Stewart was severly wounded. The main body of the troops, under Wolseley, being centered at Korti, the position of Stewart was a very dangerous one. The latest advices announce the fall of Kartoum and the taking of Gen. Gordon prisoner by the rebels.—Kartoum is the centre of the great caravan routes from the interior of Africa and is the largest town in that part of Egypt. It was at one time the centre of the slave traffic.

THE BAND BENEFIT.

The entertainment for the benefit of the Tecumseh Cornet band came off according to announcement last Friday evening at the Opera House. The band has made rapid improvement during the last two months and play several selections now in a very creditable manner. They opened the program with an overture by the entire band. Next followed a farce entitled "Poor Pillicoddy." This is an excellent afterpiece. It was well cast and played. The two leading characters, Mr. Pillicoddy and Capt. O'Scuttle, were admirably carried by L. F. Wheeler and Fred Spaulding. They both had studied their parts and showed a nice appreciation of them. It is no flattery to say that their parts were as well carried as many professional actors would have carried them. If Mr. Wheeler will make a specialty of Pillicoddy, he can make his mark. The young ladies in this play, Misses Nellie Reynolds, Millie Pennock and Eva Clement, surprised their friends by the excellence of their acting. In fact the entire cast upheld the play admirably from first to last.

Mr. Alba Heywood then favored the audience with two of his character sketches, which brought down the house. The old lady was immense and the green boy was, if anything, better still. He was given a rousing encore on both of them. Mr. Heywood certainly possesses first class talents for character acting and he should cultivate them.

The comedy, "Too much for good nature," was next presented. This is one of the standard comedies, and affords many opportunities for fine acting. The leading characters were handsomely sustained by L. F. Wheeler, Will blood and Walter Fowler, while Misses Eva Clement and Roeni Schreeder filled the role to which they were assigned more like veterans than amateurs. The minor parts were successfully handled by Misses Stella Cleveland, Emma Conklin, Jennie McClure and Geddie Spaulding, Walter Heck and Charlie Whittier. The play was well sustained throughout, and the interest was kept up to the drop of the curtain. The entertainment closed with the Golden Leaf waltz by the band. The boys realized a nice sum over and above expenses. Their success in this first effort should encourage them to give our citizens another entertainment at some future time.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

We are glad to see Rev. C. E. Conley out again.

A. D. Gilmore, of Blissfield, was in town this morning on business.

S. D. Nesmith, of Detroit, was in town to-day. Mr. Nesmith expects to move to Hillsdale in April.

Mrs. H. S. Cheever, of Ann Arbor, who came out last week to attend E. B. Wood's funeral, returned home on Tuesday.

The most of Ridgeway is in town to-day attending the law suit of Jos. Keeney vs. J. T. Eveleth, on trial before Justice Burridge.

Jim Cole's market is always supplied with the best the market affords. He now is supplying our citizens with fresh fish of all kinds.

Ed. C. Baird and wife will remain in town a few weeks. Mr. Baird's many friends here would be much pleased if he would decide to make Tecumseh his permanent home.

The Brownville Progressive Euchre Club met at the residence of Mr. E. Hand last evening and had a very pleasant time. They next meet at the residence of C. M. Burlingame.

Rev. C. E. Conley has a cane on which is carved the name of every member of the class of '71, University of Michigan, the class with which he graduated. It is a keepsake which he prizes highly.

The gospel meetings at the Baptist church, which were discontinued by reason of the pastor's illness, were resumed last evening. Rev. Mr. Farmer, of Hudson, will assist in the meetings this week.

We call attention to A. W. Mills' notice among our specials of a book lost. The book is highly prized by the owner, and Mr. Mills is anxious to find it. He borrowed it for a temporary use and is held responsible for its return.

S. W. Temple has made an arrangement with Henry McClure whereby orders for coal may be left at McClure's store, and they will be transmitted by telephone to the coal office. Mr. Temple's customers will find this plan a great convenience.

The inauguration of President elect Cleveland passed off yesterday according to program. An immense concourse of visitors was in attendance, the largest crowd ever seen in Washington, The Senate meets in extra session to-day when the new cabinet will be formally sent in.

Mr. Hudson wishes to return his thanks to his congregation and friends for the very liberal donation given him on Wednesday evening, and would assure the managers and all concerned that their kindness will be greatfully cherished in the time to come. We hope that they may long live to do good and make others happy.

The excursion party for New Orleans started Monday afternoon with light heart and a "God-speed" from those they left behind. The party was not as large as expected, as many, who intended to go, found it impossible to perfect their arrangements. Still a goodly number went, armed with a plentiful supply of baggage and anticipations of a good time.

Mr. L. D. Dewey, who has been suffering from paralysis for several months, sustained another shock last week which terminated fatally last Monday morning. Thus another old pioneer has gone from among us. The funeral services were held at the homestead farm west of the village this forenoon. A suitable obituary notice prepared by an old friend will appear in next week's HERALD.

The Meigs-Underhill combination have again disappointed the lecture committee, and there will be no entertainment this evening. They were at Columbus, Ohio last evening and telegraphed that they had missed connections and could not reach here. They could have left Columbus at five o'clock this morning, and arrived here on the noon train. Perhaps the young ladies did not wish to get up so early.

The character impersonations presented by Alba Heywood on Monday and last evenings, were well attended and gave excellent satisfaction. Mr. Heywood possesses unusual talents in that direction and gives a most enjoyable entertainment. He travels from the grave to the gay and assumes both lady and gentleman characters with equal success. Those who have not heard him should not miss the last entertainment to-morrow evening.

The beautiful floral crown and the miniature wheat field, which were given by business men on the occasion of E. B. Wood's funeral, came from Mrs. Nathan Smith of Adrian. The crown contained callas, rosebuds, heutzias, hyacinths, allysum, and encharis. The large cross given by the Bible-class was composed of the same varieties. The wheat field was made up of hyacinths, forget-me-nots, sea-mosses, ivy leaves, ferns and wheat. All these pieces, which were very costly and elegant, were without doubt as fine as were ever shown in Tecumseh. They were ordered through Mrs. Smith's agent, John J. Orr of Tecumseh.

A. H. Tupper was in town over Sunday.

Mrs. A. E. Smith of McGregor, Iowa, has been visiting friends in town during the past week.

Ab. Wilson has already received an order for 12,000 cabbage plants. He is getting started early this season.

Mr. Jaynes, of Manchester, the instructor of the Tecumseh band, was present to assist the boys in their entertainment last Friday evening.

W. T. Eccles has just received a box of oranges from Swan's grove in Florida. They are immense both in size and quality, and if you don't believe it just try one.

Asa McIntyre spent last Sunday in Tecumseh. Asa has a position as brakesman on a passenger train between Elkhart and Toledo on the L. S. & M. S. railroad.

All members of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F. are requested to be present at their next regular meeting on March 10, as there will be work in the initiatory degree.

The M. & O. railroad company have issued a neat folder descriptive of their line, giving time tables, connections, etc. The title page contains a fine view of Devil's lake.

During the past two years 30,000 roller skating rinks have been opened in this country. During the last year and six months 100 new court-plaster factories have been established.—Evansville Argus.

Mr. Jas. E. Haviland, who lived in Raisin until last fall, is now a resident of Adrian city. He has opened a shop there and is rapidly building up a large trade in the Champion Rubber Bucket Chain Pump. His prices are fixed to meet the times and every pump fully warranted.

The Adrian Art Loan is open day and evenings, and should be visited by every resident of Lenawee county. It will not cost you anything provided you trade one dollar, or more, at Eaton's Dry Goods Store, Adrian, for with a trade of that amount, from any department in their store, they will present you with one admittance ticket. Trade at this Popular Store and help the Art Loan.

A legacy of $500, left by Mr. Samuel G. Conkling, of this place, to the board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church, has been promptly paid over by the executors. An acknowledgement will be found in the Home Missionary and in the Presbyterian Record for March, but by mistake the legacy is given as coming from Tecumseh, Nebraska. Let Tecumseh, Michigan, have the credit of this liberal bequest, made by one of its oldest and most respected citizens.

The fifth annual meeting of the Michigan tile, brick and drainage association will be held at Flint on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 10th and 11th. A lengthy program will be presented and discussions held. Mr. W. S. Comfort, of Tecumseh, is secretary of the convention. Among the papers to be read is one on "Underdraining in Harmony with Nature," by Geo. S. Tiffany, of this village, and one on "Treatment of Clays," by J. C. McKenzie, of Adrian.

RINK RACKET.

Mrs. C. D. Bills, of Goshen Ind. was at the rink last Friday afternoon.

A large crowd attended the rink Saturday evening. Sleigh loads from the country helped to swell the number.

Miss Nellie Cole, who has been visiting in Raisin a few weeks, rinkulated last Saturday evening.

Harry Root has been "blowing" in Knapp's band during the past two weeks in the absence of Fred Wood.

Saline has a champion boy skater. Last Monday night Mont Rowland met him at the Lake Ridge Hotel for a match race. The two youthful skaters are very evenly matched, but Mont came out about three laps ahead.

One, two, three, ready, go; and away they flew around the rink. We refer to the mile race Tuesday evening between Florence Rowland and Rosa Millard. Eighteen times around the rink made a mile. Miss Millard took the lead at the start and at the end of half a mile was half a lap ahead, time 2¾ minutes. During the last half mile Miss Rowland gained a little and lost it again and at the finish Miss Millard was one half a lap ahead, doing the mile in a little less than five minutes. Both the young ladies are swift skaters, as can be seen by the time they made although Miss Millard is the lighter of the two and seemed to get around a little easier and quicker.

Not to be behind the times, the young men of Tecumseh have organized two polo teams—senior and junior—and are practising dilligently for a game to be played in the near future at the rink. They are composed of the best skaters that attend the rink and an exciting game may be expected. The senior team is composed of the following: Chas. Herning, H. Herning, Wm. Ross, Fred Holderman, Chas. Bebee, Grant Smith and Walter Kinney. The following young men wield the club in the juniors. Levi Hayden, captain; Geo. Waldron, manager: Harry Stevens, Fred Tiffany, Al. Heesen, Frank Swick, and Nelson Aten.

The Tecumseh Progressive Euchre Club met at the residence of Delos Whitenack on Tuesday evening and played their first game. They play next Tuesday evening at Mr. D. W. Clark's.

The Cornet band repeated their entertainment at Manchester, Tuesday evening and were highly elated with their reception there. They had a fine house and the audience seemed to be well pleased with the program.

Surgeons of the International Throat and Lung Infirmary, Detroit, Mich., will be at the Lilley House, Tecumseh, Saturday, March 7th, where they can be consulted on all diseases of the ear, nose, throat and lung diseases. This is the only Infirmary in America that treats exclusively throat and lung diseases. Consultation free.

E. D. Burlingame is moving from town on his farm at Newburg.

Elijah Buck, of Franklin, has moved to Tipton and we understand he is to take charge of B. Knapp's store.

Morris Conklin, who has been living on Henry Keyser's farm, carred his goods to-day preparatory to moving to Illinois where he expects to make his future home.

A lyceum has been organized in the Newburg district. They held their first meeting last Wednesday evening. The question for this week is, resolved, That foreign emigration should be prohibited. Lead by Peter B. Gregg, affirmative, Scott Remington, negative.

Manager Bowen, of C. T. line packed his grip-sack last Monday and started for New Orleans, with the G. A. R. excursion. The operators on the line join in wishing him a pleasant journey and safe return home.

Manager Bowen sent a card from Cincinnati to the operators on our line stating they reached that city all right, and would go through Kentucky and Tennessee by day light. No snow there but river full of floating ice. This was Tuesday morning.

THE LATE MAYOR NAVIN.

The following dispatch from an exchange contains some interesting news about the late lamented T. Navin.

Port Townsend, W. T., Feb. 26.—The following are the particulars relating to the flight of ex-Mayor Thos. Navin. About a year ago he came here from Whatcom, W. T., and engaged in practicing law under the name of John B. Voorhis. He soon became associated with A. L. Teele. The firm of Teele & Voorhis flourished. On Teele's election for justice of the peace last November the firm dissolved, and Voorhis began practice on his own account. After his disappearance on Saturday it transpired that he was the absconding mayor of Adrian, Mich., who with a portion of the council issued bonds for water works, and sold the bonds to the extent of $50,000. This resulted in those who were responsible being found guilty of exceeding their official authority. Voorhis claimed he left to screen others, assuming the responsibility himself; he being single while the others were married. He also states that he received no money for the bonds, they being deposited in a New York bank in trust for the city of Adrian. The bonds were subsequently canceled, and Adrian lost nothing.

When he arrived here he was recognized by persons who knew him in Michigan. He convinced them that he came west with a desire to redeem himself, so they permitted the matter to rest until his flight became known. His friends here claim that his indebtedness, the amount of which, is not known, will be paid in full.

Why Tom skipped out. The immediate cause of Navin's flight was the receipt of a telegram from a friend in Michigan, warning him that his whereabouts were known. Navin settled his affairs, raised a small sum of money, forging the name of a Port Townsend business man, and departed by the next steamer for San Francisco, thus there are little hopes of his capture. It is believed he has gone to South America.

Commenting on these dispatches the Adrian Record says:

As a matter of public interest the statement of a man who visited Port Townsend last summer and saw Thos. J. Navin would not come amiss. On arriving at the city he was greatly surprised by meeting T. J. on the street, and after shaking hands with him he was invited to Teal & Voorhees' law office, and here Navin told his story. Tom, of course, admitted that the name of Vorhees was a fictitious one, but at that time assured his Adrian friends that he was leading an honorable and upright life. After leaving the office the Adrian man made diligent inquiries as regards Mr. Vorhees, and on every hand the citizens were loud in their praise of the young attorney, and each and every one predicted prosperity for him. Navin's abilities were so manifest that he was very popular and, outside of his law business, had perfected many schemes for money making, and, if the depression of business had not taken place, a fortune would have been amassed in a short time. The gentleman who visited Port Townsend also says that Tom said to him that he would some day pay every dollar he had obtained wrongfully, with interest, and then return to Adrian a free man. This seemed to be the one desire of our ex-mayor, so before the citizen returned to his home in this city he promised T. J. that as far as he was concerned he would not be molested, and he has kept his word. From other sources we learn that Tom's life since his departure from Adrian has been upright, but Thomas J. Navin commited a crime, and on his arrival here he will be tried by a jury of twelve men, who will return their verdict, and punishment will be meeted out to him according to law.

The twenty-fifth day of February was the birth day of Francis Asbury Dewey, in Cambridge. On that pleasant festive day a number of his children and grand children assembled at the home of their parents, constituting a family of nineteen to celebrate the occasion. There with cherished good will they counted on the calender of time seventy-four years, which is sometimes said to be an honorable age for a pioneer whose residence has been in Lenawee County for the last fifty six years. At this primitive house there was standing on the spacious plaza, a full grown native of the forest which has been a welcome visitor for a number of years, the admired and noble deer. In every apartment of the home was contentment and good will. The dining hall was splendidly decorated. At two P. M. the tables were spread on which were placed selections from the Islands of the Ocean, not omitting the growth of the great deep sea, also refreshments from the fertile plantations of Michigan, which crowned the efforts of the culinary art. At the evening entertainment, as usual for the last ten years, each and every one received a silver dollar with other presents in memory of their parents.

A CLEVER CAPTURE.

Adrian Times: On the 11th day of last August, Thomas and John Steinmetz were at work for Arthur Dibble, of Franklin. On the afternoon of that day John decamped, and the next morning was followed by Thomas. After their departure Mr. Dibble found a suit of clothes, a watch and chain, and several minor articles to the total value of nearly a hundred dollars missing. He made a complaint before Justice Hewlett for the arrest of the Steinmetz brothers, but the pair had entirely disappeared from the official horizon, and no trace of them could be found. Lately however, the officers received information on the case, and last Tuesday deputies Burch and Teachout found Thomas near Blissfield, and arrested him. Wednesday noon officer Burch, having received additional pointers, went to Coopersville, Ottawa county, where he found John on the farm of Harvey Bliss, some two or three miles in the country. Young Steinmetz was engaged in chopping wood near the house when the officer approached, but he did not recognize the visitor as "Bill Burch," of Blissfield, where Steinmetz formerly resided, until the arrest was consummated. The officer reached here with his prisoner this morning about one o'clock. The capture is pronounced very clever by experts. Steinmetz is a large, muscular young German.

THE VILLAGE ELECTION.

The annual corporation election took place last Monday and passed off very quietly as there was but one ticket in the field. The total poll was 171 votes, the ticket which was placed in nomination at the regular caucus on Saturday afternoon being chosen throughout, as follows:

President—Dr. R. B. House.
Recorder—Fred B. Wood.
Treasurer—James A. Boyd.
Trustees for two years—Wm. Bresie, Daniel T. Hall, Enoch G. Cook.
Assessors—Edgar A. Tribou, Jehiel Davidson.

The retiring officers of the old Council are Jerry Root, President, and Geo. Heesen and G. P. Sparks, trustees. Bresie is re-elected for 2 years. D. T. Hall and E. G. Cook are new men. J. L. Schoolcraft, who was chosen recorder a year ago, moved away last fall, since which time trustee Marsden has creditably filled the position of recorder pro tem. Fred B. Wood is now chosen recorder for the full term. J. N. Satterthwaite made an excellent treasurer last year and James Boyd will also be a good custodian of the village funds. Edgar A. Tribou is re elected assessor, and Jehiel Davidson takes the place of Horatio Keyser who has moved out of the village. The trustees who hold over are O. P. Bills, Geo. Marsden and Rufus Adams.

The retiring Council deserve a word of commendation for the efficient manner in which the village government has been administered during the past year. All the current expenses of the village have been promptly paid. The streets and sidewalks were never in better condition than now. A settlement with the M. & O. has been effected and the bonus of $2,500 paid in full, and a lease of the M. & O. gravel pit obtained for two years. The corporation is out of debt and there is money in the treasury.

Messrs. Root, Heesen and Sparks will retire from official life with well earned laurels. They have made a record for themselves of honest and faithful public servants.

The new Council is composed of equally as good men. Dr. House and Fred B. Wood have seen service on the Council before. We have no doubt that the new government will make a good record for themselves during the coming year. Some public improvements are demanded which can now be safely undertaken, since the railroad bonus is out of the way, and which will undoubtedly receive proper consideration at the hands of the incoming Council.

Adrian Record: It doesn't seem possible that in this land of plenty anyone calling themselves human would turn a needy one from their door when the mercury was the lowest it has been this winter, but such is the case. A poor orphan boy, after working faithfully for three months, was turned adrift by his employer in Raisin township. The boy's clothing hardly protected his nakedness, an old pair of rubber boots covered his feet, and nothing but a stout heart and the hopes of finding a warm place to sleep helped him on his journey. The boy tells a straight forward story. All he received aside from his bed and food was a 15 cent pair of stockings. We blush for shame to think that Lenawee county contains a man whose soul is so small that it requires the most powerful microscopes to find it.

If it were possible to set before you all the wonderful cures of Rheumatism and Neuralgia made by ATHLOPHOROS you would not despair of your own case till you had given it a speedy and fair trial. It is the remedy of one who experimented for a long time on himself to find something which would master Rheumatism. He did not succeed till he struck ATHLOPHOROS. Not satisfied with his own case as a test, he tried it on others till satisfied that a great specific was at last within his grasp. Very properly it took the title ATHLOPHOROS—champion remedy.

FINGER RINGS, ETC.

Secrets of a Talkative Jeweler—How to Test Precious Stones.

"How are finger-rings made?" asked a reporter of a jeweler. "The process is simple," was the reply. "[illegible] and a heavy press to form the plate into the proper shape, solder to unite the [illegible] and pieces, and a few tools to finish and embellish the goods, as [illegible] that is required in the [illegible]."

"Finger-rings are not stamped out of the plain goods trade. There are two kinds which sparkle in value and [illegible] some rings worth [illegible] other rings of comparatively [illegible] of a true [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] wire, which is packed with a [illegible] [illegible] which makes it perfectly round and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] per dozen. The cut trade calls for [illegible] at the time, while the [illegible] [illegible] favor upon the plain old-fashioned style, the great [illegible] being for a pattern that has been in the market for twenty-two years. The narrowest bracket is one-eighth of an inch, the widest one and a half inches. They are made into [illegible] shapes in all arms, in about [illegible] hundred and fifty patterns. In [illegible] jewelry, including a [illegible] pin and earrings, a choice may be had from two thousand patterns, which will [illegible] your capital from ten dollars to twenty-two dollars per dozen. Your fancy may select from about four hundred styles of watch-chains, which cost from twenty dollars to one hundred dollars per dozen.

"Wedding-rings. Well, here is a sample case which represents about two hundred and fifty designs that will not to chose the best solid cases made and costs only about one-quarter as much. They are all filled with a peculiar compound, which [illegible] and makes them firm. The outside is made of plate about one-third, and the inside about one-tenth as thick as the compound, the difference being made because the wear is greatest on the outside. The joints, hinge-pieces and trimmings are solid gold and are interchangeable. They are made of fourteen-carat plate, and are better and thicker than a gold case of the same size."—Baltimore Herald.

RUNNING AWAY.

A Short Story Showing That There Are Worse Places for a Boy Than His Home.

This is not exactly the season of the year for boys to run away from home, but it is getting so boys run away more or less at all seasons of the year, and large rewards are offered in the papers about the warm climate in the South, where people can eat oranges and loll in the shade in January, and the New Orleans Exposition is holding out glittering inducements to visitors to go South, where they will be able to wear linen duckers in the winter, there are many boys who are becoming restless at home and a good many will run away this winter, no doubt. A boy who reads papers, and thinks he is posted about things away from home, gets tired of doing chores with the thermometer twenty degrees below zero, and he yearns for a warm climate. He goes to bed at night with his fingers and toes cold, from working in the barn among cattle and horses, and as he undresses in a cold room in the garret, and jumps into a cold bed, and feels the wind and snow coming in the cracks, sees the frost on the glass, and hears the wind whistle, he dreams of a land that is fairer than this, and some day he takes a change of clothes, and with money enough to buy a ticket a thousand miles or so South, he leaves the old home and goes out into the world to get warm. Nine times in ten it is made so warm for him that he would give all he possesses to be home, cold as that home is. There are probably a thousand boys under twenty years of age from the North in New Orleans today, without a cent of money, living on what they can pick up. A gentleman just returned from there says he gave all the money he could spare to young fellows from Milwaukee, who had gone down there expecting to get some good paying job, but couldn't find anything to do. They have found the warm climate, but even in a warm climate a person must eat, and unless virtually to take himself up in trees and he has got to have a place to sleep in doors, as there is a cold rain falling almost constantly at this season of the year which tells hard on the marrow of his bones. Running away from home is a bad step, as the majority find out to their sorrow. Anything is better than to get he can not through to eat and a place to sleep, but when the boy gets there he finds a tramp. While in the country that he can't work, there is work to do. In almost every community there are [illegible] enough to do the work there is needed done, and that wants to hire a boy he knows the people, who knows his parents, who knows how he has been brought up, and prefers to a stranger, whom he half expects to be a thief. It is hard enough for a man or a boy to get work when he is known, when there is work to be done, and a hundred men and boys are out of work when once a tramping. A boy who runs away from home and goes to a strange place, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

EARTHQUAKES.

The Theories of Scientific Men and Seismologists in Regard to Them.

The intimate relation between earthquakes and volcanoes is universally admitted, though earthquakes do occur in regions which give no indications of either past or present volcanic activity. Along the southeast coast of Spain, however, there is ample evidence of such activity in past times; and has been remarked by a writer on the subject that an earthquake is simply an integrated volcano. As to what, however, is the exact cause of seismological action geologists have not yet made up their minds. The mathematicians have compelled them to give up as quite untenable the old idea of a thin crust over a molten interior which in its surgings would break through in the shape of a volcano, or reproduce in the shell the huge waves which would swell along the internal surface. The hypothesis of a solid shell and a solid nucleus with molten matter between has fared little better. The earth, it is now held by the best geologists and physicists, must be a solid body to a very considerable depth, if not, indeed, to the core. At the same time we may be assured that the most intense heat exists at no very great depth below the surface, heat so great that but for the immense pressure exerted by the superincumbent mass the matter would actually melt; it is held that it does occasionally do so when from any of the many forces which are at work the pressure is relieved, and this, according to a certain school, gives rise to volcanic or earthquake phenomena.

Others, however, maintain that these manifestations can be satisfactorily accounted for by chemical and mechanical action. It seems to be generally admitted that great masses of water are constantly filtering into the depths of the earth from the ocean bed; and that the molten materials which issue from volcanic rents have absorbed enormous quantities of steam and other gases. Prof. Judd tells us, we have the most indisputable evidence. "It is to the violent escape of these gases from the molten rock masses, as the pressure upon them is relieved, that nearly all the active phenomena of volcanoes must be referred." And what accounts for volcanic action may also account for at least a certain class of earthquakes. For there may be other causes, most of them, however, referrable to the movements which must be almost constantly taking place in the interior, owing to the cooling of the earth's crust. Variations in atmospheric pressure have been thought to account for some earthquakes, and it is noticeable that a sharp fall of the barometer was observed all over the south of Spain in the afternoon before the first great shock, and that there have since been frequent fluctuations. The mere falling of an internal cavity would almost certainly produce vibratory phenomena. Indeed Prof. Milne seems to believe that the earth is full of cavities of all sizes, like a huge Gruyere cheese, and that consequently vibrations of greater or less intensity are constantly occurring, as we should find had we instruments delicate enough to measure them. But it is possible, perhaps, to have seismographs of such too fine a structure, so fine as to record the vibration of every passing jinriksha. Essentially the explanation of all these phenomena seems to be that our planet is a cooling body, and they will only cease when every particle of heat has left the heart of our old mother, when also, geologists tell us, there will be no more sea, when the air itself will have vanished, and the earth will be as dead as the moon.—London Times.

DELIGHTFUL DAKOTA.

The Charms of This Favored Region Artistically Described—The Newly Discovered Site of the Garden of Eden.

Dakota is the newest, worst treated and grandest of the Territories of the Union, the garden spot of the continent, the imperial wheat belt of the globe. It is a more than royal realm, which ten years ago was unexplored and almost unknown, which but five years ago was almost wholly a region of romance and of fable. It is a peerless but modest land, that never sounds the fishhorn of its own fame. It is the world's true wonderland, where no storms and tempests ever blow, and where all the breezes are trained to sing psalms in tunes in pianissimo style and in even better time and rhyme than the rendering of "The Order of the Full Moons" I heard just now.

Our wildest blizzards, as unenlightened down-Easters sometimes term them, are used by gentle mothers to lull their babes to sleep. The sun shines over with a mellow splendor that calls to mind the far-famed Happy Valley of "Rasselas," and there is just frost enough in our winters to turn the elm leaves golden. No summer drouths or winter floods spread devastation over the fields and hopes of our husbandmen. No army worms or grasshoppers sweep those fertile plains and valleys with nibbling desolation. No hailstorms rattle their destroying musketry upon the grains and fruits and plate glass windows of that elysium—except, now and then, just enough to furnish business to our ambitious young home hail insurance companies.

Bananas bloom in November and young oranges are picked the day before Christmas. Raisins, striped stick candy, tin horses and india rubber dolls, ripen always just in time for Santa Claus' peddler wagon, with his reindeer team and his "little round stomach that shakes when he laughs like a bowlful of jelly." Pineapples and figs grow spontaneously on Canada thistle bushes everywhere, while the cotton-woods and dog-fennel trees yield brook trout, nectarines and persimmons, of large size and flavor, a canal boat-load to the acre. Spring roses blossom on the plain, gentle Annie, for New Year's posies, and potatoes grow as big as beer kegs at the roots of every tuft of prairie grass. Cabbage heads, of full congressional and Senatorial size, give forth the fragrance of the jessamine and honeysuckle to humming birds as large as canvas-back ducks and clad in all the prismatic glories of the aurora borealis. We hatch our own wild geese of such dimensions that tenderfeet from Pennsylvania, for instance, are liable to mistake them for winged hippopotami on lakes of never-freezing rosewater and cologne.

Blizzards, tempests, tornadoes and rascally political breezes come to that modern Eden only as dimly understood wailings from distant regions and peoples who do not know enough to find their way to the sole remaining quarter-section of Paradise in all the Western world. There no wave of trouble ever rolls across the peaceful breast, and the prosperous people who raise infallibly from twenty-five to seventy-five bushels of No. 1 hard wheat to the acre of land, that costs them nothing and get $1.35 a bushel for it, can calmly smile at Satan's rage and face a frowning, because less fortunate, world.—Colonel Pat Donan.

LAWYERS.

A Few Remarks About the Most Trusted and Distrusted of Men.

They are the men who make contracts and unmake them; who gives advice and sell counsel; who make money out of trouble and make trouble out of money; who create estates and distribute them legally; who live by loaning money and often subsist on borrowed capital; who hear and conceal marriage secrets, and later drag out faded love letters in bitter divorces; who are pleased and persuaded by the lucky, but often go out of court branded and dispraised by the side defeated—and, with one side always the loser, and generally both, what wonder that the slurs of character fall to the current lot of a lawyer!

Without the smiles of the merchant's customers, he meets the frowns of business men in trouble. Fortunes are to be saved or lost. He must win the victory or bear the blame forever. The lawyer is like the builder who knows that, be it ever so perfect, the elaborate house he has finished can never quite suit the proprietor.

He carries the double burden for self and client; is invited to win what others have failed in, urged to mend the broken pieces of a foolish contract, bound to account for confessions in letters, asked to replevin goods already secreted, to attach the effects of a malicious merchant, to unearth fraudulent elections, to reclaim encumbered estates from vexatious tax-titles, to keep one for years in plenty by restored possessions and broken wills—all by a lawyer's art and eloquence!

He is fated from the start to uncertainty, where clients exact no less than absolute victory and long wish it reasonable, while they know it is only probable. By logic and argument, on the theory of their client, with the facts only partially stated, and that part deeply shaded, they are to explain away their defeat, if it come in the end, by a tirade on the perjury of opponent's witnesses and the depravity of human nature.

Happy lawyers! They are men who live so easily, flourish so long on the bounty of a grateful people, make the laws and settle the titles, defend the weak and enjoy the rich fruits of the world's praises and abuses, mingled and commingled in such rare harmony that none can define where censure ends and approval commences.—J. W. Donovan, in Current.

TOBOGGANING.

Some Speculations as to How the Next Craze Will Catch You.

Tobogganing, the contagion of which seems to have come from Montreal's two winter carnivals, threatens to be the next popular craze. Already artificial hills are being built, where natural ones do not exist, and some provision for a glacial surface when ice is not to be had will doubtless be forthcoming. It is a wild, whirling sensation that takes hold firmer and holds on longer, perhaps, than the roller skate. It is thus described:

"Imagine yourself at the summit of a slope six hundred feet in height, and set at an angle of sixty degrees. For a long distance it falls sheer as a nightmare, dazzling white, each little grain of the snow scintillating like a diamond. You straighten your toboggan's head, and your lady companion bestows herself in the bow, tucking her skirts tightly around her dainty feet, and drawing her nubia down to shield her eyes and face. You ensconce yourself behind her; on one hip if you will, with the other foot trailing as a rudder; though my experience teaches me to prefer a square seat, with the toes in the near neighborhood of the rearward buttons of Angelina's sacque, one hand trailing on each side, by whose pressure (a small section of a broomstick is to be commended 'in this connection') the frail vessel is guided.

"All being in readiness you gently push your toboggan to the edge of the precipice. The slender wood creaks, rustles and bends; from a level the sled assumes an almost perpendicular position, and the nether world seems to rise up and smite you in the face. Nothing in the universe resembles this first dizzy swoop. So low is the sled and so light its fabric, and so tremendous the impetus instantly attained, that the impression is one of sitting still while the universe flies up at you. The sharp edges of the straining-board cut rainbows of snow that hiss at you, and cover your beard with chilly diamonds and Angelina's hair with priceless jewels; from either side the grinding crystals fly behind you like sparks from a grindstone. You have hardly swallowed your heart again when you are at the foot of the slope, and with the bound of a shark touched with the steel, the sled, striking the level, springs a dozen feet into the air and landing on the level snow-crust speeds onward with scarcely lessening speed till at last it stops more than a mile away from the hill whence you started, and where now the great pines look like scrubby bushes. In a minute you have gone a mile and a quarter, and realized the dizzy plunge of a nightmare and the long, unsupported, breathless swoop of the eagle.—Detroit Free Press.

MR. NOX.

How a Man Searching for a Missing Article is Feelingly Described by His Long-Suffering Better Half.

Did you ever see a man search for a missing article? Well, if not, just let me tell you how Mr. Nox does it.

Mr. Nox generally arises to build fires, leaving me to my morning nap undisturbed—that is, if he can remember where he put his clothes the previous evening; if not, I am called upon to tell him where he stood, whence all but him had fled (to bed).

The other morning, after being dreamily conscious that the "blamed shavings were wet," and that the "kid-lifter never was in its place," I was broadly awakened to find Mr. Nox going up and down the bedroom, lamp in hand, his best hat stuck on the extreme back of his head, kicking his slippered foot against every bit of furniture in reach, a dark frown contracting his classic brow, and murder in his eye. I inquired the matter.

"Hunting my rubbers" (shortly).

"But you don't expect to find them in here on the wall, do you?" seeing him gazing upward.

"Course I do. Where else can they be? I've looked everywhere else."

I suppress a giggle, which has become chronic and attacks me whenever Mr. Nox begins a search. I suggest various places in which they might be found but he "has looked there." Back and forth—now in one room, then in another—warmer waxes his wrath. He gives the kitten a rough push and looks carefully on the spot of carpet it has occupied. Suddenly an idea seems to strike him, and holding the lamp high above his head, he rushes into the preserve closet. My mirth subsides. I spring up.

"O, don't go in there! Your rubbers never, never were in there. Good gracious! Come out!" (raising my voice in command.)

"I don't know they ain't, and I'm going to have them. Do you suppose I'm going to milk that cow without my rubbers?"

So much talk had awakened the "flower of the family," who starts up and says, speedily:

"Saw 'em on the piano las' night."

This is too much for me, and I roll over in bed, hugging a pillow ecstatically over my mouth to suffocate my laughter. When I had recovered I peeped out and found Mr. Nox examining the piano—first at one end and then at the other. He prepares to take off the lid, when my indignation gets the better of my discretion, and I angrily demand what he is hunting, anyway.

"Why, my rubbers, you blockie, didn't she say they were here?"

"O you half wit're! Do you think they could be in there? Stop tearing up things so."

He goes into the preserve closet again, goes out, flies into the kitchen and through the pantry. Then I hear the safe door click, wood box and coal hod jingle merrily, the oven doors clang, a pailful of potatoes roll out upon the floor, the ash pan clatters, the sink is explored; I hear him open the clock; then back into the sitting room he tramps. My work basket suffers, sewing machine examined, my work tumbled, I hear the dolls and playthings of the "Flower" dashed upon the floor, then a door bangs and all is silent. Mr. Nox has gone out into the untried, unfeeling cow yard to milk that cow (she gives a whole pint now every morning) without his rubbers. I grieve not: the ground is perfectly dry, I know he is safe from damp feet. I rise at once and dress briskly: I know I have no time to lose if I would have my breakfast before ten o'clock. I have not had ocular proof of the result of Mr. Nox's eccentric searching for lost apparel, in vain. I am perfectly aware of the chaotic state of the house, and am prepared to meet it. I consider myself a heroine, in a small way, to be able to meet it. I hurry forth to the kitchen; crossing the sitting room I stumble over some object occupying the middle of the floor, and stooping to examine, find—the missing rubbers.—Texas Siftings.

A Modern Oracle.

A most satisfactory modern oracle appears to have been established at Kairwan, the holy city of Tunis. It consists of a telephone, with an ingenious Arabic-speaking French priest at the one end and a number of the credulous faithful at the other. The story is an excellent instance how "they as has brains" always find some opportunity for making use of them. The inventor of the oracle was once a member of a monastery at Avignon. Expelled by an infidel government, he went to Algeria and turned Trappist, but finding that profession apparently too narrow for his versatile and energetic nature, he subsequently had the happy thought of turning Mohammedan, and combining the furtherance of French political designs with the exercise of his new religion. Installed, as a reward for his usefulness, as the keeper of a kourba, or shrine, but finding the ordinary income of the office somewhat inadequate, he has now hit on the happier thought of increasing it by the introduction of a telephone, by which he is enabled from his cell room to return prompt and apparently miraculous answers to those who come to ask him for Divine guidance.—*Paris Cor. —The District Attorney of Boston says that he encounters no such obstacles in the discharge of his duties as women. No criminal can be so undeserving of sympathy, so completely an outcast, that he has not a mother, wife or sister to plead for him. They are the most persistent lobbyists on earth he declares; the most unreasonable, and yet the hardest to withstand. They lie in wait for the prosecutor of their loved ones; their audacity would make the adamantine cheek of a Washington claim-broker seem a suffusion of modest blushes; they meet arguments with tears and denials with moans; and he thinks that, on the whole, justice is oftener defeated by them than by all other causes.—Boston Transcript.

CONGRESS.

SENATE, Feb. 26.—A communication was read from the Attorney General stating that the deficiency bill as it had passed the House would be entirely insufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of the United States Courts for the remaining four months of the present fiscal year, and asking that the bill be amended by the senate to conform to the estimates of the Department of Justice. A message from the House was received announcing its disagreement on the Postoffice Appropriation bill amendments and asking a conference. Messrs. Plumb, Allison and Beck were appointed conferees.

HOUSE.—The conference report on the Agriculture bill was adopted. The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Fortifications bill. Mr. Horr opposed the bill. "We had got," he said, "a fort that was worth carrying for a gun that was worth keeping." He drifted to a reference to Mr. Cleveland's letter and said at the time of the election he had not a high appreciation of the Democratic candidate but his admiration for the man increased daily. "His letter contained words of wisdom, every one was worthy of commendation, and he only regretted that such pearls had been cast before such Congressmen." He declared that the Prohibitionists would have to rely upon the business sense of the Republican side of the House to run the Government. After some further discussion the committee rose and reported the bill to the House, which passed it. Some minor reports were then adopted and the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON.

The Adams Express Company's safes which were in the car burned by the recent collision at Four Mile Run, near Washington, were opened in the office of the United States Treasury and the charred money they contained examined by experts of the Department. It has been shown that over $110,000 were in the safes, most of which has been identified and will be redeemed so the loss to the Express Company will be trifling.

The municipal elections in Maine were held on the 2d. John W. Deering, Democrat, was chosen Mayor of Portland by a plurality of 351 over John H. Fogg, Republican candidate. The Prohibitionists polled 410 votes. The City Councils are about equally divided politically. At Bath James M. Wakefield, Republican, was elected Mayor by a majority of 646 over Galen C. THE Senate held an all night session on the 2d discussing the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill. A number of unimportant amendments made in the House were rejected. A joint resolution was read and laid over requesting the President of the United States to enter into negotiation with the States of the Latin Union and other powers for the free coinage of silver. The section appropriating $400,000 to aid the New Orleans Exposition was adopted. In the House the Committee on Appropriations reported back the Naval Appropriation bill with Senate amendments, and asked that they be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The principal amendments were non-concurred in and the bill sent back to conference. Mr. Bennett called up the contested election case of Fredericks vs. Wilson (Fifth Iowa district) and a question of consideration was raised. The members commenced filibustering and kept it up until a late hour at night without getting a vote on the question when Mr. Holman submitted a report on the Legislative Appropriation bill agreeing upon all of the 176 amendments except one involving $39,432 for the pay of clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees. The conference report was then adopted.

LABORERS ON THE FARM.

EDITOR OF HERALD.—My attention was called to an article in the Tecumseh HERALD of Feb. 19th written by "American Boy" in regard to the discussion on "German Labor" by the Farmers' Social Club. I was not present at that meeting and consequently do not know to whose remarks, or to what he so much objects. I dislike any controversy through the papers, but I am jealous of the honor and interests of the club, and I think that there are points in his article, entirely erroneous and which may lead to harm by the misrepresentations which it contains, not so much as the club or farmers as to the applicants for labor. I know this subject is discussed freely by farmers upon the streets of evenings by large numbers who congregate there, and which the ideas contained in the said article are ventilated freely to the discredit and detriment of laborers and to the majority of their employers. It leads them to imagine that they are poorly paid, improperly cared for, and excessively worked in season and out of season, consequently they become discontented, sour, morose, and insulting; and as we all are very apt to be treated as we treat others they make their condition unhappy and miserable, when it could be pleasant and agreeable. This state of feeling often leads them to leave a good and profitable situation to do much worse. Farmers furnish homes and employment to a large class whose talents, means, training and education would bar them from other pursuits.

"American Boy" speaks of his "meager earnings." I would say that a good hand, whose reputation stands high, can command good and profitable remuneration for his labor, considering that he has all the necessaries of life, save the one article of clothing provided for him, to say nothing of the luxuries as libraries, socials, entertainments, and dining with guests.

When the products of his labor are compared with that of the farm, and we consider the amount of money required in the investments and expenses of the latter, and the slight amount required in the former, his pay is not meager, and he can save up a handsome competency out of it, if he is steady in his habits, industrious and economical, as farmers have to be, as has been done by many farm hands whom I now have in my mind and who now have good farms of their own.

It used to be a common saying in our neighborhood by farmers, that if they wanted to hire money they could always find it more readily with some month hand than anywhere else. These men who have earned their farms as month hands, now find as much fault as any other class with their help, because they know what a man ought to do if he earns his money. If I agree to pay a man twenty dollars for a month's work, and then refuse to pay him but ten dollars, he says I steal one-half of his wages, or ten dollars of his hard earnings. So if he agrees to give me a months faithful labor for twenty dollars and idles away one-half his time, I say he has wronged me equally as much out of ten dollars clean cash.

Again, "American Boy" says, "when you hire a man by the month do you specify how many hours he shall work?" Not at all, it is unnecessary. It is a well established fact that no FARMER adopts a ten hour system. It cannot be done. If a man works a team, that team has to be cared for morning and night, and if the six o'clock bell rings they must be fed all the same. Every farmer understands, and every month hand ought to understand, if they do not, that when they hire out by the month it means all day from morning until night. They sell their time for money, and it means that their time is the farmers. This should be understood, lest some should be deceived and leave their ten hours a day situation in a shop and hire out on a farm expecting to drive a team, ride a sulky plow, hay rake or mower a part of the time for ten hours, and then be furnished with a good horse and carriage, library, company, home amusements, or some other entertainments for the balance of the day. No my friend, this is not the case. Be not deceived, you who accept the situation, do it understandingly, it means labor, physical labor. No man hires you for your company altogether, although they had rather have an agreeable man in the family than one who tried to make himself disagreeable.

The mechanic works his ten hours, and then has a home and family to look after, and chores about the house to attend to. The farm hand does his day's work and then has chores about the farm to look after, his own comfort being provided for by his employer.

Again, he asks some member to "qualify his assertions" when he says "we can not get such help as we used to," and "that American Boys wanted to run to town too often and too much nights." I cannot see what qualification he wants. It is all too true. And the practice is not beneficial to the man who hires out or the man who hires him, and he cannot blame farmers if they do dislike to have their sons "associate" with him as long as he persists in these habits. These habits, my friend, will not lead you to "fill the offices of trust and honor," "to make the laws of our country," or "to the Presidency." Our Presidents were RAIL SPLITTERS, they attended strictly to business. They did not idle away their time on the street corners trying to kick up a strike among farm hands.

If farm help want to make a strike, the farmers have the advantage in the contest. I am not positive but that it would be an advantage to farmers generally if no help of any kind could be procured. Then he would be obliged to farm only what land he could till with his own help; the balance of the farm would be resting and accumulating fertility so as to produce "an hundred fold" whenever it was under cultivation, and the value of its products would be increased in like proportion when ready for market.

WINTER CARE OF FARM STOCK.

The "winter care and management of farm stock" is the most important subject for the consideration of Farmers and Breeders in this age of progression. The farmer or stock breeder who does not study his business and be ever ready to "catch on" to new ideas (if they are sensible) will not succeed. The time has come when we as farmers of Southern Michigan can not compete with the great West, either in raising grain or stock without the utmost care in breeding and feeding our stock. By scientific breeding and grading upon stock, we can produce an animal that will command fancy prices in the eastern markets at a cost but very little more to breed and raise a steer that when 2 yrs. old will weigh 1200 lbs. than a scrub that will only weigh 700 or 800. The first will bring 5 cents per lb. giving you $60 00 while the latter would be dear at 3 cents or from $20 to $25. The same is true with horses, sheep and swine. The time is gone by when sheep that will shear 3 or 4 lbs. of wool per head can be made profitable. The improved breeds of hogs are taking the place of the old fashioned "land shark" hogs our grandfathers kept that would reach through the fence and dig up the third row of potatoes. While my experience has been limited, I will give my method of caring for stock in winter, at the same time will be open to criticism, and hope the members will not hesitate to point out my errors.

First, do not keep more stock than you can feed and house well being very careful to not get over stocked; it would be better sell part at a great sacrifice at the opening of winter rather than have too much stock. All stock should have warm, clean quarters, cleanliness being very essential to the health of all stock in winter. Feed regular and in a clean place. I think two feeds per day is sufficient with plenty of pure water. To begin with horses—I should not feed too much hay, think 10 or 15 lbs. two or three times a day plenty with two feeds of grain. Although I am not much of a hand to rub and comb horses, still I think nothing pays better, as it keeps the skin in a healthy condition. Two quarts of oil meal two or three times a week is a grand thing for horses in winter with plenty of exercise.

I feed my cattle grain at night consisting of for cows, 4 quarts of corn meal, the same of bran and oil meal occasionally, in the morning a feeding of roots, then turn out and give stalks, no more feed till night. The curry comb pays on cattle as well as horses. A good carding 2 or 3 times a week is an excellent thing. Give them plenty of bedding; by plenty I mean an abundance so they can not get covered with filth.

My manner of feeding sheep is, first, breeding ewes I feed stalks in the morning with a small ration of grain, corn, oats and bran at noon, and plenty of exercise and pure water through the day, with a small amount of hay at night, housing them in a well ventilated shed. Lambs I grain twice a day, corn, oats and bran and hay twice, no corn fodder, as lambs do not take hold of stalks as older sheep do. I have salt where my sheep can get at it any time summer and winter and occasionally mix sulphur with it which has a tendency to keep the blood pure and the ticks from them. I have never been bothered to any extent with ticks. Sheep should be sorted into flocks of suitable size at the beginning of winter according to age, strength etc., and if you have any old sheep put them by themselves and do a little better by them and so with lambs that are undersized. In this manner you will get sheep through the winter that otherwise would run down and perhaps die.

To be successful with hogs they should be kept growing from the time of birth, the usefulness of a pig depending a great deal on the first eight weeks of his life. If he is allowed to become stunted he will cost more than he will fetch when ready for market. I think a great deal of bran for pigs, either made into a slop or fed dry, it develops bone. After a litter of pigs is four or five weeks old I crowd them by feeding the sow slops of bran, sour milk etc. Wean when eight weeks old and slop and feed soaked corn or wheat. If spring pigs I turn into clover and crowd them for all there is in them, and as soon as they will weigh 200lb live weight sell them. For wintering would prefer pigs from middle of August to first week in September. Get them well started and winter in a warm place, changing their bedding often and feed mixed feed. I feed my pigs 16 one bushel ears of corn a day with a peck of cooked potatoes or sugar beets, and for swill I scald bran with a little oil meal occasionally. Thus by judicious care and management, we may bring our stock through the winter so that they will be in good health and flesh for turning out to pasture in the spring. Finally, brother farmer, let us keep pace in the improvements practicable in other branches of industry and if we never become millionaires, we may have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done our best.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: I have used your medicine, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite, for indigestion and Dizziness, to which I was subject at times, and know from experience that it is worth all that can be said of it for disorders of that kind. Respectfully, W. S. MELLUS, 69 Harrison Street.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—For a long time I was troubled with severe attacks of Dizziness and blind sick Headache. I thought it was due to impure blood and a disordered state of the system. I was advised to try Favorite Remedy. I did so and have been completely cured. It's the best thing I ever heard of for any disorder of that nature, and I recommend it to many with like success.

A. DE REVERE.

Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is not advertised in vain; there is usefulness to one state or locality, it is hailed even beyond by Run-rounds in every state, as the following letter from Millville, N. J., will show.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Quite like March.

Mr. Alonzo Mills called on friends here Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Sterns visited Agent Sutton and family last week and left for Holland on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Riggs, of Milan were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Lafe Rappleye Sunday.

The Sunday school are making preperations for a concert to come off two weeks from next Sunday evening.

Mr. Emery Stowell, of Dundee, visited Mr. Lafe Rappleye and family Monday.

On Monday, Train No. 31 going East, due here 3:47 P. M. standard time, got show bound near Pulaski and did not get here until 8:30 Tuesday morning.

Mr. A. E. Palmer, of Hillsdale surprised his folks by making them a call Monday evening. He left for Detroit Tuesday morning.

Mr. Wm. Snedicor, of Tecumseh, was on our streets shaking hands with old friends Tuesday. We are glad to see him out again.

Mr. Vernie Barrett and Smith Pocklington are in Hillsdale visiting friends this week.

The attendance at the social on Friday night held at the home of Mrs. M. M. Florence was well attended. The conundrums and the Ridgeway Socialist, a lively little sheet with a lady editor, and other rhetorical exercises made the evening pass by very pleasantly. The next social will be held at the home of Mrs. W. R. Wilson on next week Friday eve.

Rev. J. M. Kerridge, of Clinton, will deliver a lecture at the Hall on Friday night next. Subject, Martin Luther, after which the Literary society will elect officers for the ensuing term.

Mrs. Winders gave a birthday party Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. M. A. Barrett, and quite a number of her lady friends enjoyed the afternoon very pleasantly. After tea was served the ladies presented her with an elegant cap, which was a surprise to her, and she says it reminds her of Old England. She is 66 years old and is quite smart.

On Saturday night between 8 and 9 o'clock two little boys aged 7 and 9 years, sons of Mr. John Sones who lives one and a half miles south west of Macon village on the Saline road, left their home after dinner to set some traps on the prairie, and got lost. They wandered away until they arrived here. Mr. S. P. Smith gave them some supper after which J. D. Arner started home with them and met their father and Mr. James Nobies hunting for them, near Mr. Wm. Clarkson's, where they took the brave little trapers home with them.

Though he were dead yet he liveth. The Britton correspondent, and once more we hear a blast from his bugle. He wishes the correspondent up the creek to explain what he was driving at a few issues ago in regard to Brittonites saying that the Ridgeway church was going to fall down, building or congregation. What we said was that it was reported at Britton that our church, not the congregation, was not safe and liable to fall at any time. He says if we will give him the right clue will hunt up the author of the report and have him hung. We would recommend him to begin on one side of their village, and make a clean sweep of it and he will do a good job. He also says if we had a dance man and a banjoist we could offer a better program at our entertainments. He must have forgotten that they have the only dance man and banjoist there is in the town and that they need him for their Box entertainments, given by the band boys, and they must keep him busy, for he has no hair on his head. He seems to think the one thing they most need is a hotel, not a saloon or a whiskey hole, but a first class public house. We think it can be done, for we understand from good authority that the gniht of the Inauguration Party that a case of beer was hid in a strawstack where one could help himself.

MACON MUSIC.

Another accident at the mill. This time Mr. Jacob Horning is the unfortunate person. While at work there one day last week, he was struck on the head by a slab thrown down from above by one of the other men employed there. Though the injury is not serious yet it was a narrow escape and might have been worse.

Quite a sightly spectacle took place here last week. Mr. Gough, the itinerant spectacle vender swooped down upon this part of the woods and had unusual good fortune I should judge from the amount of business done and artificial eyes left here.

We were all quite surprised to learn of the marriage of Mr. Elmer Camburn and Miss Eva Austin, who were married by the Rev. Mr. Dutton at the parsonage last week Sunday evening.

Quite an interest is shown here in the meetings being held at the Baptist church. They are well attended and it is hoped much good will be done by them.

Mrs. Edwin Howell ventured out one day last week in a carriage. Owing to the extremely bad condition of the roads, and while returning from Tecumseh where she had been, the carriage upset, throwing her out upon the ground. She had quite a fright, but fortunately was not injured seriously.

The people of Macon gave Mrs. Burgess quite a surprise Wednesday evening of last week. It being her birthday, her daughter, with the co-operation of a few friends induced her to leave her home for the day, and while she was gone prepared for the company who were to come in the evening. Upon her return home she found her house full of company, and was indeed taken by surprise. Supper and a pleasant time.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

No service was held at the M. E. church last Sunday morning.

Mrs. Fannie Flick, of Cleveland, Ohio, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold, two miles west of here.

Mrs. Sisson and daughter, of Jackson, were visiting at Edwin R. Vest's last week.

Mrs. J. C. Burroughs had the misfortune to fracture her collar bone last week Tuesday. Dr. Burchard was called and under his supervision she is rapidly improving.

Charles Johnson and wife, of Detroit, spent a few days in Clinton last week.

Mrs. Charles Clark entertained a party of young people at her home last Thursday evening in favor of Miss Lizzie Carrol.

The spectacle social at Mrs. Charlie Green's last week was a very enjoyable affair. Spectacles of all colors, shapes and sizes were worn by young and old. One young man escorted six ladies out there and kept a watchful eye over them all with the aid of only one pair of spectacles.

Service is held every Wednesday evening at St. John's church during Lent; also a short service in the afternoon for the children.

The entertainment to be given by the junior class of the high school will be given at the Town Hall on the evening of March 27th.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. McCollam spent Sunday in Manchester the guest of Mr. McCollum's mother.

The funeral of Mrs. William Miller, of Brooklyn, was held at the Catholic church last Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Crowell Eddy died at her home in Franklin last Tuesday morning. She has been a sufferer from heart disease for several years, which, combined with a severe cold, was the cause of her death.

State-lecturer Robinson, of Mt. Clemens, Mich., lectured before the members of this lodge last Monday night. Masons were present from Manchester, Tecumseh, Springville and Macon.

Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Conklin visited Clinton last Monday returning home Tuesday morning.

At the corporation election Monday two tickets were presented. One, called the Corporation Ticket, was the result of a caucus held Friday night. The other, the Peoples Ticket, was made up Saturday. All the candidates on the second ticket were elected except the treasurer, F. D. Lancaster, between whom and the candidate for the same office on the other ticket, Frank Brown, there was a tie. A vote will be taken by the board of trustees at their next meeting, at which time it will be decided to whom the office belongs.

We were startled to learn of the death of Fred H. Johnson last Wednesday at Oxford Junction, Iowa. He was at work on an engine Monday and in attempting to step off made a miss-step and fell. He was unconscious when taken home but grew better and strong hopes were entertained for his recovery until Wednesday, when he was told he could not live. He died Wednesday night at 10 o'clock. His remains were brought to Clinton for burial. The services were held in the Congregational church Sunday morning, Rev. Mr. Barnes officiating. The deceased was well known here and had a large circle of friends, having made Clinton his home at different intervals during his early manhood. He leaves a wife and one daughter five years old. They have the sincere sympathy of many friends in their sad affliction.

BRITTON BUDGET.

The stave mill will resume operations next week. Wages at $1.00 per day.

John Winslow is on the sick list, but still the saw mill runs with Jas. Smith at the helm.

At the school meeting Saturday evening quite a lively time occured, and when the fragments were cleared up some were found under the seats, so reported, and lights blowed out, but no one hurt. Now for a lively time in Britton; call another school meeting.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Mrs. William Miller said good bye to earthly troubles at ten minutes past four o'clock on Saturday morning, March 7th, 1885, after an illness of three years' duration. For some unexplained reason she expected death at that time and gave her friends warning two weeks ago.

The Lyceum indulged in the mock trial of a criminal Thursday evening, and dispensed justice without aid from a hangman. As there were but few men present the jury was made up mostly of women which accounts for the soft verdict. Its the first time they have been granted a feathers weight of say about this great society convenience, and it discouraged them so about pursuing their cradle vocations they refused to entertain a thought of its pecuniary advantage. Our only reminders of inaugural day were petitions for post-office honors. They were not numerous enough to produce an eclipse of the sun, but temporary insanity is expected to attack the gay reader of the mill as soon as they reach there.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Business of all kinds has revived somewhat since the weather brake was applied.

Sick ones are numerous with us and physicians consequently busy.

The steam saw mill of Morley & Walker is puffing again and has a goodly collection of logs to work up.

Numerous speculative theories are extant relative to the postmastership, and a voluminous list of names suggested as probable or possible appointees. To us the legal enactments protecting both government and people against fraud or grievances appears adequate to allay any uneasiness arising from the matter. Partisan and personal interests wane: no one can hesitate to acknowledge that we will be as well served in the future as in the past. And that is sufficient.

Monday morning three of the village dogs made a raid on Charles Smith's sheep yard and killed and mutilated twelve valuable fine wools. The slaughterers were promptly shot, and were the same kind of pills administered to a score more of our pet canines, the place would be correspondingly benefited and the owners none the poorer. What earthly good the gray or yeller or any other colored dog that lays about the house and consumes as much as a two hundred pound porker can do a laboring man with no tramps to bite, or property to guard, is a problem for which we fail to propose a satisfactory solution. Will some kindly explain!

SPRINGVILLE SIFTINGS.

Your Springville correspondent has almost surrendered to the extreme cold of last month, but will try and give you a few items.

Our old pioneer, George Sheeler, has been very sick but is now on the gain.

The Springville school closed its winter term on the 28th of Feb.; has been under the charge of Henry Daniels.

Our fishermen last week were trying to secure some of the finny tribe through the ice but with poor success.

Miss Mary Booher left town last week to visit relations in Hillsdale, Co.

Jos. H. Smith, of Tecumseh Lumber Co., spent the Sabbath at his father's.

R. L. Rogers has rented his farm to his son Ira and they are now engaged in gathering the materials for a dwelling for his son, to be completed as soon as possible. Chas. E. Smith has the job.

I have just learned of the death of another Pioneer, Wm. Smith, who came into our town from England in 1835. His last place of residence was in Rollin; the funeral will be held on Tuesday the 10th inst. He was an honest, industrious man. Thus depart our old settlers. There are now but few of the voters of 1836—only seven left.

Our snow is leaving us slowly and all danger of floods vanish.

The report is that the wickedest place in town is at the pool table at Onsted.

There is some talk about town meeting; the prospects are that there will be three tickets in the field—Fusion, Prohibition and Republican. The township meeting will be held at the Springville Hotel.

ONSTED ODDS.

William Shultis will have an auction March 13th.

E. Spalding and wife, who have been boarding at William Knapp's, have gone to house-keeping.

Mr. E. Hause will sell his farming implements and household furniture at auction March 24. He intends to return to Pennsylvania.

School closed in Dist. No. 5, Monday, March 9. A literary entertainment, consisting of dialogues, music, recitations and selections were given in the afternoon.

Wilson Lee, after being snow bound in the street for six weeks, has finally got his store settled on his lot on the south side of the railroad. He reports business increasing.

R. L. Glenn has moved the partition in the rear part of his store about 8 feet further back, and is putting in new counters, etc. He evidently contemplates increasing his stock.

The Adrian Press says: Clinton, with a population of 250, has 57 widows in its precincts. Woe to the bald-headed man that gets delayed a day in that town.

The Local says there are 20 widows in that town. Here is an important question in dispute we should be pleased to have settled.

AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which afflict humanity originate in derangement of the stomach and bowels. A single dose of these pills will prevent the accumulation of the morbid matter which poisons the system, and by its prompt action on the digestive organs restores health and vigor to the whole physical economy.

Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of those ailments which are always waiting upon a disordered stomach and bowels, are speedily cured by the use of these pills.

These pills are compounded of the most active yet mildest vegetable aperients, and are so combined as to defy detection in their operation. Their action is so thorough and yet so gentle that it is a matter of doubt if there is a trace of any other cathartic left in the system. They are sugar-coated, and are the most agreeable of all cathartic medicines.

A Sufferer from Headache writes:

Mexia, Texas, June 17, 1884.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.: Gentlemen: I have used your Pills in my family for the last ten years, and find they are the best cathartic we know of. I suffered from a severe form of sick headache, which I attribute to a disordered stomach, and I find that a dose of Ayer's Pills taken at the first symptom of the disease, relieves me in a few hours. They are the best medicine we know of for the disease.

Yours truly, W. T. Page, M.D.

I have used Ayer's Pills in my practice for many years, and have found them the most reliable cathartic with which I am acquainted. They are gentle in their action, and I can confidently recommend them to the profession as a safe and reliable family cathartic.

Yours truly, W. H. Hall, M.D.

Mexia, Texas, June 17, 1884.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.: Gentlemen: For years I suffered from a severe form of sick headache, which would last from one to three days, and would return every week. I could find no remedy that would give me permanent relief. Your agent, Mr. Page, recommended Ayer's Pills. I have taken two boxes of your Pills, and they have effected a cure. They have corrected the excessive liver and have greatly improved my general health.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills correct irregularities of the bowels, stimulate the liver and liver, and purify the blood and in all cases where a cathartic is needed they are the most efficacious and agreeable medicine.

GEORGE D. PRENTICE.

Incidents in the Career of the Renowned Humorist.

There is a sort of general idea that Prentice was "a bad man with a gun," a duelist, and all that sort of thing. Nothing could be more erroneous. The fact is he never fought a duel, but was sometimes, from the nature of his business, forced to personal and sudden rencounters. He was frequently challenged, but always made fun of messages. Once he wrote his challenger that it only took one fool to send a challenge, while it took two to fight, and he didn't wish to be classed in the category. On another occasion he accepted the challenge, and having the choice of weapons, insisted that each man should be armed with a straw and a cask of whiskey, and that each should suck with his straw from his own cask until one fell, and that one should be considered vanquished and the other's honor satisfied.

Prentice was an exceedingly candid man, as the following anecdotes will show: Once Will S. Hays, the famous song-writer, in conversation with him, said: "I suppose, Mr. Prentice, you have seen my last song?" With a sly and quizzical look at the minstrel, he replied: "Well, I hope so, I'll."

Coming out of a public building one day, where there were double doors which swung in and out, a young man, who was coming in, pushed against the left-hand side of the door in which to enter, while Mr. Prentice was pushing against the other side of the door, trying to make his exit. The result was a ridiculously awkward halt. Finally, when the two had managed to get the door open, Mr. Prentice said to the stranger: "My young friend, in making your way through the world, if you will only keep to the right you will never run against anybody but a fool, and you needn't apologize to him."

Somebody stole the unabridged dictionary once from the editorial room of the Journal, and Mr. Prentice, having occasion to use that valuable tome, discovered the loss. Forthwith he ordered that another copy of the book be purchased at once. "For," said he, "no one but a shameless egotist would attempt to edit a newspaper without a dictionary."

Mr. Prentice's hat was one of his eccentricities. He always had it more than half full of bits of paper not larger than a postal stamp, on each of which he had written a word or two, in the way of memoranda. Besides, he carried his pocket-knife, pencils, scissors, spectacles and portemonnaie in it, and sometimes, in an absent-minded way, he would put a well masticated chew of tobacco into it instead of throwing the cud away.

Many persons from abroad used to call on Mr. Prentice when they were in Louisville, as though he was one of the curiosities of the city, or just for the purpose of being able to say that they had talked with such a great man, and this was peculiarly annoying to him, as he was inclined to be retiring and really never thought of comprehending his own fame. On one occasion an old friend called on the editor, and brought with him a callow young man from some undefined locality in the rural districts. This youth was particularly curious, and actually asked Mr. Prentice to say something funny. The ludicrous remark was smoothed over as quickly as possible by the gentleman who brought the young man in, and shortly thereafter some liquid refreshments were ordered to be brought up to the sanctum. Mr. Prentice had chosen a mint-julep, and when it came he held it up and asked the gentleman why that drink was like his young friend? Of course the young man, feeling flattered by the attention, was eager to know, and begged for the answer to the conundrum. Finally, turning to the gentleman, Mr. Prentice said with a pleasant smile: "This is a greenhorn!"

Once Mr. Prentice met an acquaintance on the street who was very much intoxicated, and he declared to the wit that he was all hunkidori." "What do you mean by hunkidori?" said Mr. P. "I mean, sir," said the inebriate "that I am pretty drunk." "Well," said Mr. Prentice, "if hunkidori means pretty drunk, I think you are hunkidori." In 1868 Hon. Henry Watterson became editor and part owner of the Journal, and Mr. Prentice, who had grown quite feeble, did very little work. In the course of six months the Journal was consolidated with the Courier and became what is known as the Courier-Journal. About a year after, Mr. Prentice died at the residence of his son, Colonel Clarence Prentice, a few miles below Louisville, on the Ohio River.

He was a powerful editor, and was the most brilliant paragrapher of the age—indeed, the first one of any note. His wit was bright and sparkling, his satire keen, his eloquence grand, his poetry beautiful, his logic unanswerable. A deep thinker, a profound reasoner; genial, hopeful, human, and, therefore, sometimes erring, he had the best of friends, the bitterest enemies, and he was, all in all, a great and gifted man—a genius.—W. L. Visscher, in Denver Opinion.

—The Japanese are great bathers, using such hot water that fatal syncope is an occasional consequence. With them bathing is a sensuous luxury. Their neighbors, the Chinese, get inside as much clothing as possible, and are never seen in the streams in which their country abounds bathing or swimming. To go barefoot, except from dire necessity, is with them indecent. The Malays and the natives of Aden are many of them scarcely less than human ducks. A bit of silver can not reach the bottom of the sea before they have it. The Hindoos and Brahmins bathe especially in the Ganges as a religious exercise, smearing the body with oil first, if they can afford it.

—"Delta metal," discovered by Alexander Dick, of London, a combination of zinc and iron, is said to be as much superior to brass as steel is to iron. It is very tough, showing a tensile strength of sixty-two tons to the square inch when drawn into wire of twenty-two gauge. It does not tarnish as easily as brass and takes a high polish.

The Perfumery Trade.

Some kinds of perfumery are worth their weight in gold. The export of fine perfumery is principally from Grasse, Nice, Cannes and Bremen. The business is divided into two parts. The manufacturer extracts from the flowers their essential oils. The perfumer buys these oils, pomades and extracts, and compounds them in several ways.

Only about a dozen of all the fragrant flowers in the world are used in the manufacture of perfumery, viz.: the violet, rose, orange flower, jasmine, tuberose, cassie, lavender, thyme, rosemary, geraniums, jonquil and fennel. The rose and the orange are the most valuable. Of the numerous varieties of the rose, only one is used, the Province rose, single, pale pink, the most sweet smelling of roses; not hardy.

Picking for perfumery occurs in almost every month of the year. It is a paradoxical fact in the business that the bitter orange yields the best blossoms for perfumery. One ton of blossoms yields two pounds eight ounces of oil neroli. The fruit of the bitter orange yields a very fine essential oil, bigarade. It is used in many scents. The orange tree, cultivated for its oil, lasts with care over 200 years.

One ton of the distilled leaves of the scented verbena geranium yields from 24 to 30 ounces of the essential oil. The flowers of the jasmine are picked just after sunset in July, and in the morning, as soon as the dew is off, in August. The jasmine is a peculiarly delicate flower. Its essential oil is so volatile that it cannot be extracted by distillation, the heated water decomposing it is so that only a faint tinge of the perfume is left in the water that passes through the refrigerant.

Like the jasmine, the oil of the tuberose cannot be extracted by distillation. The perfume of the cassie is much used in compounds. The process of manufacturing perfumes is in itself very interesting, especially to the ladies.

A ton of roses yields only two ounces of the attar. If kept at a temperature below 60°, attar crystalizes; if kept open to the air and light, it is easily volatized. Perfumed oils are made by putting fresh quantities of flowers into the finest of virgin olive oil from 20 to 30 different times. The essential oil of flowers has a strong affinity to lard or grease. The latter, rendered as white as snow, is perfectly saturated with the flowers. The process is repeated many times. In this way we have pomade of rose, orange, cassie and violet. The affinity of the perfume of flowers for alcohol is, however, stronger than than for grease. Pomades, immersed in alcohol, are rendered into extracts, the grease leaving the perfume. It is safe to say that, among the numerous articles of toilet, the manufacture of perfumed pomades, perfumed oils and high-priced perfumery generally is as a sealed book to many persons.

Educated and Experienced.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass., who have a thorough knowledge of pharmacy, and many years practical experience in the business. It is prepared with the greatest skill and care under the direction of the men who originated it. Hence Hood's Sarsaparilla may be depended upon as a thoroughly pure, honest, and reliable medicine.

A Regular "D. B."

Not long ago a well-known newspaper man took day board at the Sherman House, says the Chicago Times. He was at home in the place, and was a privileged character. One day he sauntered behind the office counter into the regions that are supposed to be sacred to gentlemen who wear diamonds and address congressmen, governors, tourists, porters, newsboys and other statesmen by their first names, when his eye happened to catch sight of his own name on a slip with others over the clerk-keeper's desk. He would not have given it a passing thought had not the letters "D. B." been attached. He "flew off the handle" on the instant, and demanded an interview with the proprietor. That august functionary was found, and to him the irate journalist addressed a few remarks. "Do I owe you anything?" he asked. "No, sir," was the prompt reply. "I have paid my bills all right so far as you know, haven't I?" "Certainly. I have no complaint to make."

"Then why do you permit your clerk to post me over his desk as a 'D. B.?'"

"I do not; there must be some mistake."

The journalist assured him that there was no mistake, and that he had seen the objectionable and significant letters with his own eyes. The more he thought of it the madder he got. The proprietor could not pacify him until he promised to have the matter investigated and the guilty man punished. It was found that the night clerk had perpetrated the outrage, and that evening the injured citizen took an early opportunity to take him to task. "What did you mean by putting 'D. B.' after my name?" inquired the newspaper man. "O, go away," he replied, thinking his interlocutor was chaffing, as was his custom "don't bother me." "No, I won't go away, and I demand a civil answer to my question."

The clerk looked up and saw an angry man in front of him. Then his countenance was suddenly bisected by a grin, and he doubled up like a man with the colic. "You took day-board, didn't you?" he inquired, as soon as he regained his composure. "Yes, I did, and I have paid for all the day-board I have enjoyed." "So you have," was the soothing response, "but just come around here a minute, till I show you something. You see you are in good company. You are an associate of several millionaires and railroad magnates. They are each and every one designated the same way, 'D. B.' That is short for 'day-board.' Regular boarders are marked 'R. B.'"

The journalist spent a week's salary trying to bribe his audience with liquid nourishment to keep still, but like all good things the joke leaked.

30 Years Experience.

An old nurse of 30 years experience says that she has never used a wine that has had such pleasing effect on her patients as that made by Mr. Alfred Speer of Passaic, N. J. It is a pure article and people have confidence in it. Ask your druggist for it and take no other. For sale by C. A. Wright & Co.

An English writer says that the middle class Englishman, as a rule, does not buy books, except a few classics and professional treatises, but waits for his chance at the book club or circulating library. There are instances where authors are asked to lend their own copies by men often times their income. Wine and china may be bought, but books must be hired for, says the writer, the English are educated to the point of reading, but not to paying for books.

From the Reverend Clergy.

Among the many ministers of the gospel, who have been helped by Brown's Iron Bitters, the Rev. E. A. Spring, Corydon, Iowa, says, "I used it for general ill-health and found it a great help." Rev. Jas. McCarty, Fort Stevenson, Dakota says: "It cured me of severe dyspepsia, and increased my weight twenty-five pounds." The Rev. Mr. Olley, New Bern, N. C., says he has taken it, and considers it one of the best medicines known. The Rev. Mr. Whitney, Hingham, Mass., says: "After a long sickness from lung fever I used Brown's Iron Bitters and gained strength." So throughout the States with hundreds and hunderds of other clergymen.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. Hood & Co., Gentlemen:—I have had ringworm humor and salt rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores, so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt inclined to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor, but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.—Gentlemen:—Please send me by express two bottles Hood's Sarsaparilla, and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

EXTENSION NOTES.

[illegible]

Thinking that [illegible] New [illegible] I start the pen [illegible] Mar[illegible] [illegible] We arrived at [illegible] and after engaging a supper with a stir [illegible] the lightning express that is the pride where they use farther lightning [illegible] At 7 P. M. [illegible] from the depot. We joined [illegible] of white people by to a circle of blue and gray [illegible] Brothers [illegible] the rest for the weekend I refer you to the other boys. I sat up to keep them company. As we journey [illegible] the year [illegible] greenleaves and [illegible] we find it only in small patches at Cincinnati. We [illegible] and took a bite at [illegible] the Central depot and after a hearty breakfast we pick [illegible] the Queen & Crescent route for the land of Dixie. The first object of special interest was the high bridge across the Kentucky river which is 275 feet high and 1,200 feet long. There are twenty-seven tunnels on this route the longest being seven eighths of a mile in length and passing from the Alpha[illegible] [illegible] must be pretty deep. All the bridges and trestles on this line are made of iron. The country is poor and worse than the blue grass region, and that section remind one of the farming section about Tecumseh. But the buildings and improvements are not to be compared with ours. Nine hundred and thirty-six miles south of Cincinnati we saw the first team plowing. At 6 P. M. we crossed the Cumberland river at Point Burnside. At Greenwood we saw the wreck of an engine where it and nine freight cars went down a 60 feet. Three men were on board and no one hurt. We arrived here at 7 P. M. safe and sound, and were welcomed at the Staunton House, D. B. Tray having made preparations for our reception.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Since writing our last letter, we have "done" the town. We find here a fine city of 16,000 inhabitants, white, black, yellow, copper colored and one albino boy, about six or seven years of age, born of black parents. The coldest weather they have experienced here this winter was 2° below zero. This is a large manufacturing town. Among the leading industries may be mentioned the Chattanooga Stove Works, employing 400 men; the Chattanooga Pipe foundry, 40 men; the Handle factory, 50 men; Chair factory, 50 men; roller mill, 400 men which has run full blast through all the hard times; furniture factory, 35 men; a large tannery; two blast furnaces and a lot of smaller establishments. The business men have built a railroad belt completely around the town, communicating with all the railroads, so that cars can all be loaded at the factory doors, switched to the proper road and shipped to any point in the South. We visited "Lookout" to day. A drive of 6½ miles was required to reach the top which was 1704 feet above the river. We saw the place where the boys in blue scaled the walls. I cannot attempt to give you even a faint idea of the scene spread out before us. Could we have lifted the smoke that hung over the summit we could have seen seven states, or a portion of them.

I would advise all who visit this place to stop at the Staunton House. It has splendid accommodations and reasonable rates. If they want a carriage, call on Owens & Co., and ask for Jim; he is the boss. In the National cemetry here rest the remains of 12,856 soldiers, of which 4,926 are unknown. More anon.

THE DOZEN.

The Hudson Post has got it bad. It says: At Hillsdale Saturday Mrs. W. H. Myers picked two dozen beautiful roses from a bush that was covered with snow to the depth of eighteen inches.

The old folks concert at Blissfield last week was a very successful affair.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S CABINET

We present below a portrait and biographical sketch of each member of the new cabinet. They are a [illegible] of commanding ability and well fitted for their respective portfolios. The only criticism we have seen passed upon it is the fact that [illegible] have been taken from the [illegible] state of New York. But the character of the two men [illegible] that slight [illegible] Hayard [illegible] and Dan[illegible] the three [illegible] [illegible] Manning and Whitney [illegible] as well known [illegible] executive ability. We predict that it will be a strong Cabinet. The new administration starts out with [illegible] with the indication that Cleveland [illegible] a good luck will still attend him.

HON THOMAS F BAYARD.

There is no name in the list of Democratic statesmen to which the party turns with greater reverence than that of Thomas Francis Bayard, U. S. senator from the diamond state. It is only the smallness of the territory represented by him which has kept his name from graching the presidential ticket of his party in presidential conflicts heretofore, and in 1880 he was second only to the successful nominee in the number of votes polled in the Democratic convention and after his defeat entered the campaign in the best of spirit and with the greatest enthusiasm for his successful opponent. Since his advent in public life no one has been more prominent in the great debates on questions of moment. In the greenback craze of 1878 he was one of the few public men who refused to dally with repudiation and demagogueing. His utterances have been so fraught with common sense, good judgment and withal so conservative that he has won the admiration of thinking men of all parties. Against a man of doubtful character he would prove an invulnerable candidate. He was born in Wilmington, Delaware, Oct. 29th, 1828, and was the son of the late Hon. James A. Bayard, of that state. He was educated partly at home and partly at Flushing School, and his training was in the direction of a mercantile career. He entered a hardware house in Philadelphia as a clerk, but tiring of the business he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1851. In 1853 he was appointed U. S. District Attorney of Delaware, but resigned in 1854. In 1868 his father was appointed to serve out an unexpired term in the U. S. Senate, and at the same election Thos. F. Bayard was elected for a full term of six years to take his seat in March, 1869, a remarkable circumstance in itself. He was reelected on the expiration of his term almost without opposition. He was chosen as a member of the famous electoral commission, and voted against counting in disputed states for Hayes. He is a member of one of the most distinguished families in his native state, has a large family and lives in a modest, economical and very retired way. He is highly respected by both political friends and foes. He was appointed Secretary of State by Cleveland, March 5th, 1885.

DANIEL MANNING.

Dan Manning, the famous manager of the Cleveland-Hendricks forces in the presidential contest of 1884, is one of New York's most prosperous business men. He is also the head of the regular Democratic organization in New York. He began the serious duties of life as an errand boy in the office of the "Albany Argus." He worked his way upwards until he became a compositor of that sheet, and showing marked aptitude he was given the position of local reporter, and soon after was entrusted to make the Legislative reports. The companionship of the eminent men of that day awakened the possibilities in young Manning and unfolded to a remarkable degree those traits of character for which he has since become famous. Upon the death of Mr. Cassidy of the Argus staff, Mr. Manning became the manager of that paper, and subsequently became the head of the enterprise. He was made the President of the Commercial Bank of Albany. He husbanded all of his opportunities and made the most of them. There is nothing sentimental in his make up. He is a cool, calculating, clearheaded business man. Mr. Manning was married to Miss Mar[illegible] Little of New York, and the union resulted in the birth of a son and daughter. Mrs. Manning died in 1880 or thereabouts, and in 1884 or 1885 Mr. Manning was married to Miss Fryer. This marriage was given great newspaper publicity in the account of the participants of the ceremony. Among those present at the ceremony were Cleveland and Flower and many lesser lights in public life. He was appointed Secretary of the Treasury by Cleveland March 5th.

WILLIAM CROWINSHIELD ENDICOTT.

William Crowinshield Endicott is a native of the old "Bay State" having been born in Salem Massachusetts in 1827. He entered Harvard University as a student and graduated therefrom in 1847. He then entered the law school of that institution, completed his studies in 1849. In 1850 he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law. In 1873 he was called to the Supreme bench and held that position for nine years. In 1882 he was compelled to resign his position of trust in order to restore his shattered health, to accomplish which he made an extended tour of England and the Continent. Mr. Endicott's first political affiliation was with the old line Whigs, but in the Bell-Everett campaign he joined the ranks of the Democrats. He was a presidential elector in that memorable contest. In 1884 he ran for the governorship of Massachusetts but was defeated by Robinson, his Republican opponent. Judge Endicott is not a politician in the accepted sense of the term. He is averse to the machinations of the ward politicians and his opponents say he is impractical. He belongs to the better element of the Massachusetts Democrats. Personally Mr. Endicott is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. His health although better than at the time of his resignation from the bench, is far from being good, and the strain of a Cabinet position must eventually tell upon him. He was tendered the portfolio of Secretary of War, by Cleveland, but is said to have desired the Attorney Generalship, thinking himself better qualified to fill the latter position. He was appointed Secretary of War by Cleveland March 5th 1885.

WILLIAM COLLINS WHITNEY.

William Collins Whitney who has through his intimacy with President Cleveland, become a national celebrity, belongs to the younger branch of the Democracy. He was born in 1839 at Conway Massachusetts being the son of Gen. James S. Whitney, the great opponent of Gen. B. F. Butler. After a preparatory course at Williston Seminary, Easthampton, young Whitney entered Yale College in 1859. He graduated with high honors. He then attended the Harvard Law School and graduated therefrom in 1865. He settled in New York, entering the law office of Abraham R. Lawrence, now a judge of the Supreme Court. In 1871 Mr. Whitney first made his appearance as a party leader. At that time he was foremost in the organization of the now famous "Young Democratic Club," and was most active in opposition to the Tweed Ring. So vigorous and determined were his onslaughts that he attracted the attention of the great reformer, Tilden, and was materially assisted by that sage in all of his subsequent efforts. In 1872 he served upon the New York School Board and during the same year ran for the District Attorneyship. In 1875 he was appointed to the position of Corporation Council and held the position until 1882 when he resigned. During his term of office he was ever on the alert to further the interests of the city and gained a reputation for the thorough way in which he conducted all public matters. In 1882 when Cleveland ran for Governor of the "Empire State" Mr. Whitney was most active in the canvass and from that time the two have been the warmest and most intimate of friends. Mr. Whitney is reported to be quite wealthy and is an ardent admirer of horses. He can be seen daily driving in the Park. He is also some what of a sportsman. He was appointed Secretary of the Navy by Cleveland March 5th 1885.

LUCIUS QUINTUS CURTIUS LAMAR.

Lucius Quintus Curtius Lamar is the full name of the great South[illegible]. Senator Lamar is advancing to the sere and yellow leaf although as yet he gives little evidence of physical decay. When under great mental strain he gives way, and this is perhaps the only evidence of the nervousness of old age. In contrast with the general impression, Senator Lamar under ordinary circumstances, is a cool, impassionate man, and his counsel is often sought by members of both political parties. When, however, he becomes enthusiastic over his subject, the typical southern character leaps its bounds, and he is then the eloquent passionate pleader of his cause. He is above the average height and in his younger days was of magnificent physique. He is a great student. He was born in Putnam county, Georgia, in 1825, and graduated from Emory College in 1845. He studied law under the Hon. A. H. Chappell and was admitted to the bar in 1847. He went to Mississippi in 1849 and was made professor of mathematics in the Mississippi University. He resigned in 1850 and went to Covington, Georgia. He established a law practice and was elected to the legislature in 1853. In 1854 he returned to Mississippi and was sent to Congress. He sat in the 35th and 36th Congress. In 1861 he represented his state in the Congress of the Southern states, and during the same year entered the Confederate Army. In 1863 he was sent by Pres Davis to Russia on diplomatic business. After the close of the war he was sent to the 43rd and 44th Congresses, and in 1877 was sent to represent Mississippi in the U. S. Senate, and has continued to do so ever since. His term of office expires in 1889. He will have great influence in the new regime. He was appointed Secretary of the Interior by Cleveland March 5th 1885.

WILLIAM F. VILAS

William F. Vilas is a native of the staunch old Commonwealth of Vermont. That state is the Gibraltar of Republicanism, but notwithstanding this fact, Vilas is a sturdy and constant Democrat. He was born in July, 1840, and at the early age of eleven removed to Wisconsin. He graduated at the Wisconsin State University and also studied law at Albany. During the late war he served as an officer in a Wisconsin regiment. He first attracted the attention of the general public in a speech at a banquet of the army of the Tennesee in 1879. So eloquent was this address that it made him the cynosure of all eyes. He is one of the foremost lawyers of Wisconsin, practicing at Madison. He was commissioned to revise the statutes of Wisconsin, is a Regent in the State University, and a professor in its Law School. He came to national prominence in July of 1884, having been chosen chairman of the Democratic National Convention convened at Chicago. He was also made chairman of the committee entrusted with the commission to formally announce to Cleveland his nomination. As an orator he has gained a national reputation for his eloquence. He is one of the rising men of the bar and the Democratic party. In the Cleveland Blaine campaign of 1884 he was most active in the Western States, and through his ability did much to effect the election of Cleveland. As a reward for his services he was appointed postmaster-general by Cleveland March 5, 85.

AUGUSTUS H. GARLAND.

Augustus H. Garland of Arkansas was born in Tipton county Tennessee, on June 11th 1832. When but a year old his parents removed to Arkansas. He was given a classical education at St. Mary's College and St. Joseph's College in Bairdstown, Kentucky. After a thorough law course he was admitted to the bar in 1853 at Washington, Arkansas. The thorough education both in the classics and in the law, that he had received, has doubtless been the secret of his great success in life. After practising law for three years in Washington, Ark., he removed to Little Rock in 1856 and began the practice of law. He was a delegate to the Arkansas State Convention of 1861, when that body passed the ordinance of secession, and was a member of the Provisional Congress that met at Montgomery, Alabama in May of the same year. He was afterwards chosen to represent his state in the Confederate Congress, serving in both houses, being in the Senate at the close of the late unpleasantness. He was chosen to the U. S. Senate from Arkansas and his term should have begun March 4th 1867, but he was not allowed to take his seat. He made the first test oath case as to lawyers in the Supreme Court of the U. S. and gained it. He followed the practice of law until the fall of 1874 when he was chosen Governor of Arkansas without opposition. He was chosen to the U. S. Senate to succeed Powell Clayton, Republican and took his seat March 5th 1877. Although he was a member of the Convention that passed the resolution, in consequence of which Arkansas withdrew from the Union, he was antagonistic to the action, and strenuously opposed it. When, however his state did decide to withdraw, he, like many other men of the South, considered that it was his duty to assist his state in the struggle, and accordingly went out with his. Upon the floor of the U. S. Senate, Mr. Garland has distinguished himself in various ways. He is considered as the ablest lawyer and debater on the floor. He was made Attorney General by Cleveland March 5th 1885.

A FEW KIND WORDS.

EDITOR OF HERALD.—We are much pleased to see the HERALD rapidly coming to the front and reaping the reward it justly merits by long years of hard toil and labor. Probably not very many comprehend or take much thought of the task required each week to present a fresh news-paper, full of good reading. Many will not help support a home paper, saying that it does not amount to any thing. They unjustly compare it with large state papers, whose editors spend hundreds of dollars every day to collect news from all parts of the world. It is noticeable however, that the home paper is generally grabbed the first one after the mail arrives and those who would not have it in the house generally borrow one to read. There are very many in and around the beautiful village of Tecumseh, of which we all love to boast, that could if they would contribute at the editor's solicitation a large amount of good reading matter that would be of benefit especially to the younger class. Of course it is unpleasant to bear the criticisms, and how did you come to know so much all at once; but that can all be got along with.

FIDO.

A DISASTROUS FIRE.

Last evening about eight o'clock the fire alarm sounded and the steamer was out and fired up in short order. The fire proved to be in the house of Thomas Cummins, on the corner of Evans and Cummins streets. The hose was laid at once to the fire. The steamer was stationed at the corner by Kinney's furniture store, but no water could be got. The supply was short or the hydrant was frozen. So the house burned down. The fire caught in the attic, probably from a defective chimney, and the snow on the roof smothered the flames, keeping them back for ten or fifteen minutes. Had there been any supply of water the flames could have been extinguished with but slight damage to the building. The contents of the dwelling were all taken out, although somewhat damaged by rough usage. The wood shed in the rear of the house was saved by spreading carpets over it and wetting them down. Webb Frazer was considerably scorched by getting too near the burning house, and John Orr had one hand severely burned. Gus Cummins was badly burned also. Mr Cummins had a policy of $1000 in the North American—$800 on the house and $200 on contents.

The experience of last evening should prompt the Common Council to institute some plan at once for providing the village with an efficient water supply. A fire engine without water is more ornamental than useful. Three or four large reservoirs should be built, or some other plan adopted to give us an abundant water supply which will be available in any emergency.

An exchange remarks that between progressive euchre and roller rinks the saloons are poorly patronized, but the good of this point is neutralized by the further assertion that the prayer meetings are deserted for the same cause.

The east bound passenger on the M. & O. due here at 3:37 Monday afternoon did not arrive until eight o'clock Tuesday morning. The wind had drifted the snow at some points on the road six feet in height. The freight was fifteen hours late also.

The new Monroe daily, the Evening Commercial, has been received. It is a neat six col. folio, containing a good assortment of telegraphic and local news. If hard work and pluck will achieve success, it certainly deserves to succeed.

Last Thursday, while Supervisor James was unloading a car of lumber, a stake broke, letting the lumber slide from the car and Mr. James was thrown to the ground. He was considerably shaken up and one shoulder cap was fractured. He is about again now, however, and yesterday he started for Lima, Ohio, with the other members of the Court House Committee.

Bert Waring leaves this afternoon noon for Peoria, Ill., where his father now resides, with the intention of making that city his home. Bert has been an efficient clerk in the post-office, and we dislike very much to lose him. The good wishes of his friends will go with him. We almost wish that he may get homesick and come back in a few weeks.

R. Patterson, Esq., of Cassopolis, son of Jos. H. Patterson, formerly of Lenawee County, and one of the eight delegates from this county to the convention of 1835, received a letter lately from Benj. B. Morris, dated at Snow Hill, Worcester Co., Md., stating that he was one of the delegates to that convention from Oakland County. Mr. Patterson sent to John J. Adam, a copy of the Cassopolis paper containing the letter. Mr. Adam recollects well the presence of Mr. Morris in the convention. His survival was probably unknown to any of his now living colleagues. We append Mr. Morris's letter as it appeared in the Cassopolis Democrat:

SNOW HILL, WORCHESTER CO. Md.,
February 26, 1885.

R. PATTERSON, Esq., Cassopolis, Mich. Dear Sir: As I had the honor of being one of the members of that convention from Oakland, duly elected in my absence from home, and did my duty manfully when voting was to be done, I think possibly some of my good friends in Oakland may feel neglected if the name of their member is allowed to be passed over without notice, if any survive. I doubt if many are yet living.

It is a great many years since I have knowingly seen any one who was a member of that convention, or whose acquaintance I made there. I have from time to time learned of some one's disease and have thought perhaps I was the last.

My home for the last twenty years or more has been near New York, coming here some two years since. Fifty years is a good while to remember individuals whose acquaintance is made only as a member of a debating convention, but I remember distinctly Mr. John J. Adam, who possessed many agreeable qualities which it is pleasant to remember. I am, sir, very truly yours, B. B. MORRIS.

A BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY.

Saturday, the 28th of February, a number of relatives and friends met at her residence in this place to celebrate the anniversary of the 88th birthday of Mrs. Sarah Edwards. A sumptuous dinner was prepared and the house in every way arranged for the comfort and enjoyment of the guests by her only remaining child, a daughter who had made her mother's home her home most of the time for 58 years. As the events of the past were discussed by the relatives, fixing, or trying to fix the date of births, marriages, deaths and incidents relative to some of their number of generations past, they were much aided by the now unimpaired and excellent memory of her who had been a careful observer and watched the passing events for 88 years.

Fifty-three years ago last Sept. Mrs. Edwards and her husband, Richard Edwards, with three children, started on the then fastest overland train (a lumber wagon) from Seneca Co., N. Y. for Michigan. They arrived in the township of Franklin, Oct. 9th and settled there on their future home, on which they lived 34 years. While there two more children came to cheer them, but sorrow followed, and four of their number passed to their eternal home. The remainder of the family in the fall of 1865 moved to Tecumseh. April 4th, 1868, death again came to their home, and the husband was taken.

The wife of his next younger brother (Andrew) was at the anniversary. The wife of the youngest brother (Asa) is still living, but all of the Edwards of that generation are gone, and Sarah is the only member of her father's family living. A son of each of these brothers came to celebrate the birth day of their aunt. Four daughters of her nephews were present, with other distant relatives. An anniversary of 88 birth days is too late for many near relatives to celebrate. Their birth days have stopped being counted, but those that were permitted to be there had a very pleasant time and it is hoped that we boys and girls of 40, 50, 60, and 80 may long remember the 88th birthday of our mother, sister-in-law, aunt, great aunt, cousin, second cousin and friend.

A RELATIVE.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

The school this year has been unusually prosperous, the number enrolled being more than one hundred. Lectures have been delivered by the teachers and by Dr. Morden.

The Crescent Literary Society will give a public exhibition on Friday evening, the 13th, beginning at 7 o'clock.

Fred Hathaway, of Addison, a member of the Seminary Alumni, and a graduate of Earlham College, will give a lecture on "The Political History of the United States," Wednesday evening, March 18th.

Miss Newsom, the lady principal at the Seminary, greatly entertained the students on the evening of the 4th with an account of her trip to New Orleans.

At the end of this term, Thos. B. Eddy and wife, the superintendent and matron for the past two years, will retire to their newly purchased farm west of Adrian, and J. U. Harkness and wife, of Rollin, will take their place at the Seminary.

The next term of school opens on the 31st of this month, and is by far the pleasantest part of the school year. Review classes will be formed for the accommodation of teachers who wish to attend. Those wishing to engage study rooms had better apply soon.

RINK RACKET.

Miss May Hunt and Miss Stella Saxton, of Manchester, favored the rink with a call last Saturday evening. They are both fine skaters.

Mr. Fred Teachout, of Adrian, was at the rink last Saturday evening.

The Tecumseh Cornet Band discoursed music last Tuesday evening at the rink.

Work was commenced on the new floor in the Opera House last Monday morning and it will be completed as soon as possible. Manager Sutton has decided to run a first class skating rink there, and no pains will be spared to make it as pleasant and comfortable as possible. The dressing rooms below will be used, one for the ladies and the other for the gentlemen, and the closet under the east stair case in the hall will be utilized as a skate room, a ticket window being cut through into the main room. The Vineyard skates will be used. The rink will be opened to the public next Thursday evening.

The senior and junior polo teams played six practice games at the rink last Tuesday evening in which the junior came off victorious in four, the senior winning the other two. The boys play a good game, considering the practice they have had.

It is said to be fashionable for ladies to wear one white and one black stocking while skating at the rink. When they exhibit the black hose it is a sign that they intend to turn pirate and capture the male, while the heaving in sight of the white means that the craft is in distress, and wants a pilot to take her in charge.

The roller skate, it is thought, is a very recent invention, but a gentleman of our village informs us that when a boy he attempted to construct a pair of wheel skates very much like those now used in the rinks, but was discouraged by the pooh-poohs of an older brother, who held that the scheme was impracticable and useless. The manufacture of roller skates was thus delayed several years, and doctors and divorce courts have been cheated out of a large amount of business thereby.—Hudson Gazette.

Mr. C. D. Bills, proprietor of a skating rink at Goshen, was arrested last week for refusing to pay $150 per annum license, which the council imposed on him. It is thought the case will be stubbornly fought, and probably not be settled until a decision is reached in the supreme court.—De Kalb Republican, Auburn, Ind.

A TRIP TO EAST SAGINAW AND DETROIT

Having some business to transact in Detroit, we took the M. & O. train Friday for Britton and thence via the Wabash road into Detroit, arriving there about noon. After making a few business calls, we took the five o'clock P. M. train on the F. & P. M. road for East Saginaw and reached our destination about nine o'clock that evening.

Saturday and Sunday were spent in that city, where we found good quarters in the hospitable little home of our brother, Geo. N. Stacy. George now holds a good position in the office of the Saginaw Courier, filling the place of business manager. He is well pleased with his location and the company seem to be well satisfied with his work.

During the day Saturday we had an opportunity of looking about the city a little. It is one of the "live towns" of Northern Michigan. The present population of the city is about 30,000 which is rapidly increasing. The "hard times" have not inflicted the damage on the business of Saginaw which most towns in the west have sustained. The lumber and salt interests lie at the foundation of their business, and these run anyway regardless of any stringency in business affairs. But of course the lumber trade is much less in dull times. Saginaw is well provided with railroads. The F. & P. M. have their general offices there; the Bay City branch of the Michigan Central touches the city; it has the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw, the Saginaw Valley and St. Louis, and the Saginaw, Tuscola & Huron railroads. It also has three or four lines of river steamers, during open navigation in the summer. The streets of the city are lighted with electric lamps and many of the business houses are provided with the same light. Some of the largest lumber and salt firms in the state are located here. The city boasts of several residents who can count their riches in seven figures. The Bancroft House is probably the finest hotel in the State, with the exception of one or two in Detroit, and has a national reputation. The city has six skating rinks, all of them doing a thriving business, and has just opened a new $85,000 Academy of Music. The city is inclined to put on airs over their "Academy" and well they may. It is, without an exception, the finest building of the kind in the state, with reception rooms, dressing rooms, extra stage conveniences, private boxes, two galleries, and all the other et ceteras for a complete theater. We found Sam Clay in charge when we called. He will be remembered by many as the manager of an orchestra in Adrian twenty years ago. Mr. Clay drifted into Saginaw, made some money, went into the theatrical business and now owns a good slice of stock and is manager of the new Academy. This city is the center of politics in that Congressional district. The fight last fall was a terrific one between R. G. Horr, the eloquent Republican and Timothy E. Tarsney, the "Young Lion of the Saginaw," who is equally popular among the Democrats. Horr beat Tarsney four years ago and Tarsney returned the compliment last fall.

We availed ourselves of the opportunity to go through the Courier building, and were somewhat surprised to see the extent of the improvements which have taken place within the last few months. The daily Courier is an eight page six column quarto, with a circulation of nearly 3500 copies, and takes the lead among the daily papers in that section of the State. It has lately put an entire new dress on the paper, added a double cylinder Hoe for newspaper work, a folding-machine, a splendid Cottrell cylinder for job work and an eighth Gordon. The establishment has a first-class bindery in connection therewith. The Job department is now turning out a large line of blanks and record books for the F. & P. M. railroad. E. D. Cowles, the managing editor of the Courier, is admirably equipped for his work. He has served on the Courier many years and has an extensive acquaintance in Northern Michigan. With Geo. N. Stacy as manager in the Counting-room and Will Evans in the Job Rooms; the business end of the establishment is well cared for. The subordinate employees are all picked men, chosen for their especial fitness for the work they have to do. The Courier, if held to the work under its present management, is destined to become a power in Northern Michigan.

Leaving Lansing at seven o'clock Monday morning on the F. & P. M., we reached Detroit in about four hours and spent the balance of the day transacting necessary business and making a few friendly calls.

Calling at J. K. Burnham & Co's. we found Mr. F. C. Stoepel and Geo. Freeze with whom we had a pleasant chat. Mr. Freese showed us through the building which contains five floors and a basement, all devoted to the wholesale dry goods trade. They are now receiving heavy shipments of spring goods as the spring trade is just beginning to open up.

We found Sam James selling cloaks in Buhls fur store. He spends about half his time on the road.

Alf. W. James & Co., are located in the Merrill block. Alf. started a wholesale jewelry and silverware business in February last and is fairly getting started. He is well pleased with the outlook thus far.

Frank Smalledge is running his drug store still at 700 Jeff. Ave. He owns a beautiful fawn colored horse that is a "stepper," and he is gaining quite a reputation among the sporting men. We had the pleasure of a ride down the city after Frank's horse, which, by the way, he has refused $1000 for.

Sumner Collins has his shingle hung out in the new building opposite the post office, and is making commendable progress in the law. He and Alf. James are now rooming together, which makes it very pleasant for both of them.

We found Bert Tribou at the desk in Pitman's coal office, looking as happy and handsome as ever. Bert has a good position, which he fills with credit and which is congenial to him.

We gave John B. Price, on Jeff. Ave., a call. He keeps a good stock of printer's stationery, type and general supplies. He sells Farmer & Little's type, and Chas. Eneu Johnson's Ink, and keeps a full assortment on hand.

The Detroit Paper Co., are still running at their old location on Jeff. Ave. They make more of a specialty of print and wrapping papers but keep a full line of all kinds of printers' goods and have built up the largest trade of any house in Detroit.

Leaving Detroit on the Lake Shore at 6:40 we arrived home safe and sound on the night train, and resumed our duties at the desk on Tuesday morning, feeling much refreshed after a three day's respite from business cares.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Some time Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, in his experience and observation, declares that in cases of Impure Blood it is the most reliable medicine for the treatment of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

HUDSON RIVER R. R.

Conductor Mellus says Something of Interest to all Travelers.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: I have used your medicine, called Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite, for Indigestion and Biliousness, to which I was subject at times, and know from experience that it is worthy of all that can be said of it for disorders of that kind. Respectfully, W. S. MELLUS, 68 Harrison Street.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Feb. 26, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: For a long time I was troubled with severe attacks of Dizziness and Blind Sick Headache. I thought it was due to impure blood and a disordered state of the system. I was advised to try Favorite Remedy. I did so and have been completely cured. It's the best thing I ever heard of for any disorder of that nature and I've recommended it to many with like success.

A. De REVERE.

Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is not confined in its sphere of usefulness to one state or locality, but is hailed as a boon by hundreds in every state, as the following letter from Millville N. J., will show:

MILLVILLE, N. J.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—I had been a sufferer from dyspepsia from the time I was sixteen years old. I had consulted various physicians, but could find no relief; therefore I had almost given up in despair of ever recovering my health, when Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was recomended, which I tried and have been cured. It's the best medicine I ever knew of, and worthy of the greatest confidence. MRS. S. C. DOUGHERTY.

FLAX.

The Future of the Flax Industry in the United States.

Some papers in Iowa and Kansas are endeavoring to convince the farmers of those States that flaxseed will no longer be a paying crop. They predict that the price of flaxseed will decline during the next two or three years as rapidly as that of wheat has since 1880. Their predictions are based on fears of overproduction. While they think that the production of flaxseed will decrease very largely, they declare that the demand for flaxseed will still decrease, for the reason that the majority of farmers can not, with the present price of products, afford to manure their buildings and fences. They also express the fear that the production of oilcake will greatly decrease, for the reason that corn and other grains are so cheap. A few argue that cottonseed meal will gradually displace linseed cake and meal in all the great markets of the world. They state what is perfectly true—that less than half of the cottonseed produced in any country is now pressed for the purpose of extracting oil, and argue that when it is all utilized for furnishing oil the supply of cottonseed meal will be so large as to render linseed cake almost if not quite unnecessary. They think that this state of things will be reached in the near future. One person in Iowa who is seeking to enlighten the public on the matter of producing flaxseed for the market states the crop in this country last year amounted to 12,000,000 bushels, of which farmers have saved over [illegible] bushels for the purpose of sowing next spring. He states that this amount will sow 1,000,000 acres, and will produce twice as much seed as can be crushed in all the mills in the country, though they work at their full capacity during the entire season. He anticipates that the price of flaxseed will decline next year to such an extent that the crop will not pay for raising. He therefore cautions farmers to beware of flax and to sow their fields to some other crop.

It is certainly difficult to foretell the future of any form of product. It is possible that there may be in the course of a few years more flaxseed produced than will be wanted for making oil or for furnishing meal to be used for stock food. It is certain, however, that there is at present no ground on which such a supply of things will occur. As nearly as can be estimated at present, the amount of flaxseed raised in this country last year and sent to market amounted to about 7,000,000 bushels. Of this amount 3,675,102 bushels were received in Chicago. This crop was not sufficient to supply the demands of our linseed-oil producers, as there were imported from foreign countries, chiefly from India, no less than 2,540,226 bushels during the year. Strange as it may appear, flaxseed produced on the banks of the river Ganges was brought to Chicago manufacturers and converted into oil last season. This seed pays a duty of twenty cents per bushel. Flaxseed holds its price better than any American farm product. At present writing it is worth $1.00 per bushel in the New York market. The stock on hand is apparently quite small. The amount in store in this city at the commencement of the present year was only 311,725 bushels. A considerable part of this is held by seed merchants, and will be sown next spring. There is apparently no prospect that the demand for oil will fall off next year. The custom of painting buildings and fences has become general. Wood exposed to the action of the atmosphere is covered with paint not so much to add to its beauty as to insure its durability. It is found to be economical to cover the surface of wood with paint. In this city brick walls are generally painted, and in many cases those composed of stone are treated in the same manner. There is apparently no prospect that any substitute will be found for the oil extracted from flaxseed for the purposes for which it has long been employed.

While the demand for flaxseed in this country is large, there is little prospect that its production will be undertaken in most of the States. It has never been raised in any of the Southern States to any considerable extent. It is not a promising crop for farmers in the older settled States. The productiveness of their fields has been injured by long cultivation, and the soil is full of the seeds of weeds. Other crops pay better on high-priced lands. Flax is a suitable crop for farmers in the northwest for many reasons. It is easy to market. A car-load of flaxseed brings much more money than the same bulk of corn or any of the small grains. The cost of seed for a given amount of land is comparatively small, as only half a bushel is required for an acre. A paying crop can be obtained from land that has been broken for the first time. Flax is a more remunerative crop than corn to raise on newly-plowed prairie land, even in localities where the seasons are long enough to produce good crops of corn. It is specially adapted to regions where a corn crop can not be raised or can not be depended on, or where it can only be raised on soil that is under a high degree of cultivation. A farmer in any of the States or Territories west of the Mississippi River can at least realize enough from a crop of flaxseed to pay the cost of breaking the land and expense of seed, sowing, harvesting, and marketing. This is all a farmer in any part of the country can reasonably expect of a crop of seed-corn. In many cases a crop of flaxseed has sold for enough to pay for the land as well as for preparing it. If the growth of flaxseed is exhaustive to the soil, it has the effect of subduing a tough turf and putting it in a condition to be easily worked with a view of preparing it for the production of corn or small grain.

Flax is a source of wealth to the farmers of the Northwest. The amount of oil-cake exported last year was 524,847,331 pounds, which sold for $7,115,153. Flax will do better in soils containing an excess of alkali than any crop grown by farmers. It production on soils abounding in alkali is recommended. That flax is an exhaustive crop all acknowledge. Its production can only be continued on what are known as very strong soils, such as are found in the valleys of rivers subject to overflow. The exhaustion of the fertility of soil by the production of flax may, in a great measure, be prevented by the return of the plant to the soil from which it was produced. This may be best accomplished by judiciously feeding the straw to stock and applying their manure to the fields.

Farmers who expect to raise large crops of good flaxseed should be careful about selecting the seed they sow. For a century flax was raised in this country chiefly for the fiber of the plant, that was used for making cloth, and not for seed. It was accordingly sown very thick, a bushel and a half of seed being sown on an acre. Very thick sowing causes the plants to grow tall and slim and to produce but a small amount of seed. Growing plants for a special purpose has the effect of modifying their character. They at length have hereditary peculiarities. Much of the flax now grown in this country is produced from the seed of plants raised for fiber. The first seed was sown in the States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean, and the bark of the stalks was manufactured into cloth in the houses of farmers. As the flax plant moved West it was cultivated for a new purpose. What we want now is a plant that will produce seed. In India, where flax has long been raised exclusively for the production of seed, the plants are said to be only about eighteen inches high, but very productive of seed.—Chicago Times.

ECONOMICAL DRESSING.

How to Clothe Oneself Cheaply and Well—A Grand Desideratum.

Dressing for the street is greatly simplified, and was never more economical than at present, for it is quite allowable for a lady to use one cloth costume on every occasion that will take her out of doors during the winter; or, failing in this, she can have a long cloak that will completely cover any house dress she may prefer to wear. The street suit is, as we have said before, now made of woolen goods of heavy quality, such as the heavier camel's-hair, bison cloth, Cheviot, or else ladies' cloth of a very light weight. It is best to choose this in a single dark color instead of the mixed cloths used last year. Brown is the fashionable color, and the first choice with both young and elderly ladies. Next this comes plum-color, gray or blue, then black, but the black cloth suits are considered rather elderly-looking. Dull red and wine-colored dresses are less used this season, and require the best materials to make them attractive.

The woolen suit that finds most favor is made of three pieces, viz., the skirt, with drapery attached at the belt, a basque, and an outside jacket. For such a suit eight yards of material are required by tailors, and this stuff must be fifty-four inches wide. From $1 to $3 a yard will be asked in the shops for the various fabrics suitable for tailor dresses. The least costly of these are the cloth-finished flannels that when closely woven have the effect of the finer camel's-hair cloths. For $2 there are excellent camel's-hair twills and serges, and the various kinds of ladies' cloths cost $2 or $3 a yard; the latter should be selected for its light weight, while the former are more sleazily woven, and are best when heaviest. There will also be needed material for the foundation skirt on which such dresses are now made. This false skirt may be of alpaca or of wool satteen under cloth, instead of being made of silk, for, as the English and French tailors say, a wool dress should look like woolen, and should be made over wool that it may hang like woolen; they also add that it is only the extravagant American women who insist upon draping woolens on silk foundation skirts.

When the waist and sleeve linings and the small buttons are purchased, this is all the expense, as braiding or fur can be dispensed with except for elaborate costumes. A small collar band and separate cuffs of fur now complete many suits of cloth, and in the spring these can be dispensed with altogether. The design of such a suit can scarcely be too severe for good style. Straight folds or single bands of cloth stitched and finished with a roll or cord of braid on the edge may trim the foot of the skirt, either in front only or else all around, and above this is a drapery of two cloth breadths, that may be arranged to suit any figure, whether a long or short drapery, and this covers the remainder of the skirt lining. Tucks are by no means abandoned, and sometimes the greater part of the front of the skirt is covered with half-inch tucks that are in the cloth, when it is bought, or, still better, they are put there by the needle, as hand-work is especially desirable on these very simple dresses. The newest basques of cloth are now made short and round behind (without pleats), and are lengthened to a point in front. But these require a border of some kind of trimming, such as fur, braiding, velvet folds, or, of Astrakhan cloth; hence for the plain dresses we are now considering the postilion pleated back is retained. The fronts are single-breasted, and the standing collar is very high. Very simple stitching finishes the sleeves without cuffs. All flounces are superfluous on these dresses, as they only add to their weight, and the pleated skirts are objected to for the same reason. For short women who must have lengthwise trimmings the front of the skirt is arranged in two wide flat panels that meet in the middle on smaller pleats, or else there are three large double box pleats that give the effect of three panels. At the foot of these panels there is an interlining of crinoline lawn, and the cloth is turned up inside. The jacket is single-breasted and the new style like that of basques is short and plain across the tourmure, but the prevailing taste is for the frock-coat that has been described in former papers. So fixed is the rule of cloth dresses for the street that ladies who have two new suits order one of rough cloth for mornings and plain wear, and a second of broadcloth or fine "corkscrew" cloth for afternoon visits and for church.—Harper's Bazar.

BALD-HEADED STATESMEN.

The Senators Who Can Not Boast of Cringerous Adornments.

Senator Edmunds, the presiding officer of the Senate, has fallen into a habit of late of wearing a black silk skull cap. He is very bald, and the air of the Senate chamber is uncomfortably cool to the exposed cranial surface, causing colds and the consequent inconveniences. So he wore this little black cap all the day, in the committee-rooms, in the Vice-President's chamber and in the chair of the Senate as its presiding officer. It looks odd to see the presiding officer of the Senate sit in his official seat with his head covered while all others of that body uncover their heads in his presence. And there are some other heads in the chamber quite as bald as his. The nearest approach to the system which Senator Edmunds has inaugurated is the course of Senator Williams, the hero of Cerro Gordo. He wears a wig. It is very neat, and is very well fitting, but he has a way when he has occasion to stroke one side of it of taking hold of the opposite side to keep it in its place, thus giving the whole thing away.

Senator Coke, of Texas, is one of the baldest men in the Senate. There is a vast expanse of "forehead" extending away over the top of his head, and down in the rear so far that there is only a fringe of gray hair running round from one ear to the other. Indeed, the fringe may be said to run clear around, for it is heavier in front where there is a bunch of white beard.

Cameron, of Wisconsin, is quite as destitute of capillary covering as those mentioned. His rather small head and rather retreating forehead fairly glisten in their polished nakedness, while on his face, in marked contrast, is a full growth of snowy white beard. Cameron is an excellent Senator, and the Senate will suffer a material loss when he goes out. It was because of his determination not to remain longer that the Wisconsin people were induced to cast about for a new man for the place. A quiet, unpretentious sort of man, he is thoroughly posted on all that is going on, thoroughly well read, safe in his convictions and judgment.

Senator Harris is another bald one. He has a peculiar-shaped head, very wide at the back and narrow at the front. The fringe of hair running around the vast expanse of baldness is white as the driven snow. So is the well-trained dudish mustache, which is the only portion of the beard he permits to grow. Ingalls is another man with a peculiar-looking head. It looks like a cocoanut, very small, very narrow, very high at the back and low in front, well covered with a thick growth of gray hair, which is parted in the middle. His stubby mustache and little patch of chin whiskers are of the same color, not white, but an iron gray. Senator Sawyer, the richest man in the Senate, is not burdened with a capillary covering, though he is not so bald as some of his associates. Pendleton has a beautiful head of brown hair. Vance has a mass of thick, iron-gray, thoroughly covering his round, large head.

Allison has a full head of black hair, which never looks as though it had been combed or brushed. Beck is very much ditto. Bower has black hair, and little patches of black whiskers mixed with gray on the sides of his face. Brown is the queerest looking rooster of the lot, with scattering white hair on his head, bunched out at the sides in old-fashioned style, and a mop of white beard all around under his throat, and running about half way up to his chin. It is the queerest sort of style imaginable, something approaching the lone fisherman cut, but infinitely worse. Cameron has a little bald spot about as big as a silver dollar on the top of his head. He is a boyish-looking fellow, the last man in the Senate chamber that you would pick out for Don Cameron after the many things that have been printed about him. Gorman has rather thin brown hair, usually well plastered down on his small head, which is big enough in proportion to his body, which is like that of a boy of fifteen.

Vest's sandy brown hair is pretty thin and pretty carefully smoothed down on his round, rather large head to conceal the signs of approaching baldness. Cockrell is pretty nearly ditto, though he probably hasn't discovered it. He thinks less about his personal appearance and more about the details of Senate business than almost any man on the floor. Mahone's small head is covered with a thick growth of iron-gray hair. Logan's hair is as thick and black as ever, and only surpassed in thickness and length by Lamar's.

In the House there are less baldheads in proportion to the entire number than in the Senate. Reed, the irrepressible wit from Maine, who is the quickest and strongest man intellectually on the Republican side, if not in the entire House, has a big, well-shaped head, very bald, but having an occasional streak of brown hair combed over it to conceal it as far as possible. Dingley, his colleague, an ex-Governor of the State, has his hair so precise in its "lay" that it gives the suspicion of a wig.

Willis, of Kentucky, is one of the baldest men in the House, as he is one of the hardest workers. It might be added that he is one of the most abused men in that body, too, at the present moment, for of course every fellow who didn't get all that he wants in the River and Harbor bill is willing to charge it to Willis, the Chairman of the committee. Broadhead is very bald, smooth-faced and having only a fringe of white hair around his head. Tillman, of South Carolina, is another quite destitute in this particular line, as are Strait and Wallace. Randall has a full head of hair, a little mixed with gray. Carlisle's hair is dark and pretty thin, his face, like Randall's, smoothly shaven. General Rosecrans' hair is very thin, his face covered with a rather thin growth of sandy beard.

Cox, of New York, has a pretty good-sized bald spot on his head, but his hair, in spite of the fact that he is about sixty, shows very little gray. That other witty man, Hoar, is as gray as an old badger, and about as fat. He has a full beard of gray hair, not white, and a queer little patch of gray whiskers on his chin. Holman's hair is pretty thin, and dark, but mixed with gray. His whiskers, which grow on the lower part of his face but are shaven from the upper lip, are much mixed with gray. Dunham, of Chicago, has a heavy black mustache and full black hair, very much resembling in this particular Senator Sabin, who has been mistaken for Dunham of late. Senator-elect Joe Blackburn has a small bald spot on his head and a very heavy mustache, which will vie in magnitude with Logan's.

In the Supreme Court, Justice Field's head is extremely bald, with a fringe of iron-gray hair and a full iron-gray beard, long and wavy. His baldness is not so plainly apparent, however, as is that of Justice Gray, whose curiously-shaped head, high at the back and rather narrow, is extremely destitute of covering. Stanley Matthews has a good-sized bald spot on his head, very little larger than when he was appointed five years ago. Chief Justice Waite rejoices in a full head of iron-gray hair, but a very bad stomach. In the lobby, Captain Eads, who is extremely bald, wears a black skull cap like that worn by Mr. Edmunds, while that other disguished lobbyist, Mr. Belknap, rejoices in a full head of hair and a magnificent beard.—Cor. Cincinnati Times-Star.

A RAILWAY ADVENTURE.

An Austin Gentleman's Experience With a Bavarian Princess.

Our Continental railway carriages, with their closed coupes, afford pretty adventuresses opportunities for blackmailing schemes which would be impossible in your open American cars. A specimen operation of these fair ladies has just been afforded by the adventure which befell a merchant—Karl A.—whose full name the police refuse to make public. He was traveling from Steyr to this city and had to change trains at the little town of St. Valentin. While waiting there for the Paris express, which was to take the passengers to Vienna, a friend introduced to him a young girl, apparently only eighteen years old, who was also going to this city. When the train reached the station Mr. A. quickly took a seat in a first-class coupe, of which he was the only occupant. Shortly before the train started the lady entered the same coupe. Hardly, however, had she cast a look around her when she remembered that she had only a second-class ticket, but before she could leave the coupe was locked by the guard and the train set itself in motion.

Mr. A. explained to her that she could have herself transferred to a second-class coupe at the next station, Amstetten, or pay the difference for a first-class ticket. The lady contented herself with this, and entering into conversation said she was a baroness, born in Munich and reared in a convent. She was traveling to Poland by way of Vienna in order to accept a position as governess in that country.

Instead of changing coupes at Amstetten she permitted Mr. A. to procure a first-class ticket for her and continued her conversation with her fellow traveler. After the train had left St. Poelten Mr. A. desired to offer the lady a cigarette. Hardly, however, had he drawn his cigarette-case from his pocket when the lady showed evident signs of uneasiness and begged Mr. A. to open the window. He readily did so, and then the governess approached the half open window. She looked out for a few seconds, then suddenly pushed down the window entirely and swung herself on the sill in order to jump through the opening into the depths below. The train was going at the rate of thirty miles an hour.

Mr. A. sprang up from his seat and towards the window and managed to catch the girl by the legs. A struggle ensued between the strong man and the desperately resisting girl, who was leaning with the upper half of her form out of the window and apparently did not want to be drawn back. All this time she kept screaming: "He wants to murder me."

The struggle lasted over a quarter of an hour. Persons at stations at which the train did not stop saw the encounter. Finally the governess' cries for help dominated even the thundering of the train. Passengers in the adjoining coupe opened the windows and added their shouts to the girl's until, at length, the conductor heard it and stopped the train on the open track. The girl was taken into another coupe, Mr. A. remained alone and the train continued with increased speed on its way to this city.

In the meanwhile the police authorities had received telegrams from the different station-keepers on the road, describing the scene they had witnessed at the carriage window. When the train arrived Mr. A. and his fellow traveler were arrested and taken to the police station in the depot, where they were asked to give an explanation of the occurrence. The lady declared that when Mr. A. drew out a box she feared that it contained an opiate and that he wanted to make her unconscious. Fortunately Mr. A. was able to prove on the spot that the little case contained only Turkish cigarettes. As there were no grounds for a charge against the merchant, the officials released him as well as the lady. Mr. A. left the station-house vowing never to travel alone again in a first-class coupe with an interesting young female passenger.—Vienna (Austria) Cor. N. Y. World.

The human structure is wonderful in mechanicism. Each organ has its allotted part to perform, and none is more important than that for which the kidneys are designed. It is, therefore, imperative that these should be kept in perfect health, and then should be jealously guarded against the encroachments of disease. George Kelly, of Jersey City, writes, "Dr. Stevens gave me Mishler's Herb Bitters while I was under his treatment for gravel, and has told me to continue to take 't."

THE COST.—The cost of the alnm used to make cheap baking Powder, is about one-fonrth that of the Cream Tartar used to make DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder. Alum makes bitter, unwholesome food, and the doctors say "Don't use it." DeLand's Chemical Bading Powder is sold in cans, and you will never be deceived. It makes delicious, wholesome food, and is true to usage, true to reason and true to health. Try it.

Spring rapidly approaches, and it is important that every one should be prepared for the depersing effects of the changing season. This is the time to purify the blood and strengthen the system, by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which stands unequalled as a spring medicine, and has endorsements of a character seldom given any proprietary medicine. A book containing statements of the many wonderful cures it has accomplished, will be sent upon application to C. I. Hood & Co., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass. 100 Doses One Dollar.

A bowl of good pea soup is as satisfying as a hearty dinner on a cold day. To make a gallon of it, wash a pint of peas and soak them over night; then boil in five pints of water, gently simmering three hours or so, until thoroughly soft. With a potato-masher rub the soup through a colander or wire sieve. A pound of beef or ham bone may be boiled with the peas. The soup may be seasoned in various ways—with onions, cloves, pepper, etc.

No remedy for Rheumatism and Neuralgia ever came before the public so well vindicated by previous experiments and so fortified by influential names as ATHLOPHOROS. Rev. E. N. Seeley, Agent of Board of Charities, New Haven, Conn., writes: "Am glad to certify that Athlophoros cured my wife of Rheumatism when all other remedies railed. She has taken but one bottle to effect a permanent cure."

OLDEN TIMES

The formula by which Mishler's Herb Bitters is compounded is, over two hundred years old, and of German origin. The entire range of proprietary medicines cannot produce a preparation that enjoys so high a reputation in the community where it is made as

The late Judge Hayes, of Lancaster Co., Pa., an able jurist and an honored citizen, once wrote: "Mishler's Herb Bitters is very widely known, and has acquired a great reputation for medicinal and curative properties. I have used myself and in my family several bottles, and I am satisfied that the reputation is not unmerited."

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

The weather got down to zero Monday and Tuesday mornings and is still under the average temperature; the snow is gradually disappearing and the bare ground appears much better than to go off with a heavy rain.

The Macon and Ridgeway Local Telegraph Co., have purchased the line from Ridgeway to Britton, making one continuous line from Lake Ridge to Britton. There are over thirty operators on the line, six or eight of whom are sufficiently advanced for business positions. Some on the line, through carelessness or cussedness are in the habit of leaving their key open, or otherwise breaking the circuit for hours at a time. We would caution those against such abuse. In business transactions it causes delay, vexation and damage. "Business before pleasure" always.

Ed. Auten's house burned Tuesday morning the 17th. Goods all saved—insured.

Alf. Lewis Esq., is taking in the sights at New Orleans.

Our mail carrier resumed the round trip on Monday. He has been making a double trip (on account of the roads from Lake Ridge to Macon), from Tecumseh to Lake Ridge in the forenoon and from Tecumseh to Macon in the afternoon. Why not have two routes? One from Tecumseh to Macon, the other from Ridgeway to Lake Ridge, avoiding the round of 18 miles, which in inclement weather is difficult to make.

"Tally" another girl for Hershel Miller—"ditto" for Jas. Small.

It is reported that a family by the name of Harrington, living in the "Beach quarters" are suffering thro' sickness, starvation, filth and rags. Dr. Hallock was called professionally and in his prescription ordered soap and water, and for the neighbors to bring in supplies. The supervisor has been notified and we trust relief will come. This has been a hard winter for those in destitute circumstances.

There will be a Union caucus at Grange Hall, Tuesday, March 31st, at 2 P. M., to nominate candidates for township officers.

J. A. Hunter has the lumber on the ground for a new frame house.

J. E. Hunter has moved to Britton.

Fred Miller will move onto the Karcher farm next week. Karcher is enlarging his house so as to accommodate two families.

Francis Yates has the lumber ready for a new house.

Charles Hoffman will move from the John Stewart farm onto the old 'Nye' Davis farm in Bridgewater about the 1st of April.

Mrs. Bradley Zibble died March 9th.

Mrs. Ebenezer Harmon, one of the first settlers in this township, died Feb. 22d., aged 75 years.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

George Freese, of Detroit, was in town over Sunday.

B. O. Randall suffered from a severe attack of neuralgia last week.

Frank Scoville arrived here from South Bend Ind. last Friday morning. He expects to return in a few days.

Bert Roff, of Jackson, has been visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anson Roff, of this place.

On Saturday, March 14th, to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown, a girl.

Mrs. Hattie Johnston and daughter Bertie, went to Tecumseh last Friday to spend a few days with Mrs. E. M. Conklin.

Miss Rosa Sherlock who is quite low with consumption, is reported a little more comfortable.

Mrs. Arthur Keyes is visiting at Danforth Keyes'.

The ladies of the Catholic church are making preparations for a supper and entertainment to be given at the Town Hall the next Tuesday after Easter. As this is the first effort of the kind that this society has made it is hoped there will be a liberal patronage. The proceeds are to be used in making necessary repairs on the church.

Mrs. John Heesen and Mrs. Ed. Rowland of Tecumseh, were the guests of Mrs. J. E. McCollum, last Wednesday.

Robert Redick has been sick for two or three weeks with rheumatism, but is a little better at present.

Mr. Albert Huntington, of Hanover Ill. who was formerly superintendent of the Clinton Woolen Mill, has been engaged to fill the same position under the new firm.

Mr. William Stitt fell on the ice last Sunday and broke his arm.

The Eddy brothers, from Vinton, Iowa, arrived here last week Tuesday to attend the funeral of their mother, Mrs. Crowell Eddy. They expect to return to their western home in a short time.

The Maple sugar social given by the school last Saturday evening was a great success. Supper was served from five until eight o'clock, after which came a program, which was thoroughly enjoyed by young and old. The band played several selections. Then came the sack race, won by Lennie Kimball. This was followed by an orange race, in which Miss Cora Van Gieson came out ahead. The third race was won by Flavius Knight. After the races came a quintette, by Albert Kishpaugh, Charles Keysor, Ansel Kishpaugh, Charlie Thompson and W. O. Silvers. The mouth organ solo was a novel as well as an interesting feature of the program. The net profit of the supper and entertainment was $12.63 which will be devoted to the organ fund.

Negotiations for the sale of the Clinton Woolen Mill were closed last week, after many weeks of uncertainty, and much fear and trembling on the part of the former employees. The controling interest in the property has passed out of the hands of Alonzo Clark, and the principal stock-holders now, are Messrs. Hamilton and Brownell, of Detroit, Albert Huntington, of Hanover, Ill. and W. S. Kimball, of Clinton. A great deal of repairing is necessary before regular work can be commenced in the mill, but it is hoped that every department will be in full working order by the first of August. This news is received with a great amount of satisfaction, not only by those who will occupy their former positions in the factory, but by every business man in Clinton. The fifteen months that this institution with all its appurtenances has stood idle, have continued to show to us all, of what benefit it has been to the town in years past, and with how little appreciation it has been met.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

F. S. Dunham has gone to Detroit with his corset factory.

Brad Parker has moved to Deerfield. W. J. Holdridge spent most of the day Monday helping him. Warren says he has only one fault to find and that was that Brad loaded him a little too light.

Chas. Babcock has moved on to the Wells farm in the place of Parker.

Nathan Spencer was expected home from New Orleans on Monday night.

Carlisle Simonds and Gus. Shoalts started west on Monday to seek their fortunes. They expect to go to Indianola, Red Willow Co. Neb. We are sorry to lose the boys, as they were both steady, industrious young men, but we honor their pluck in starting out to take care of themselves. There is nothing like going west, growing up and heading out with the country.

Last Monday while Will Kelly was sawing wood for Ed. Arner with a buzz saw, the saw broke and aroused a general stampede with the hands. Ed. was running the thing at the time and had the strap by which they pull the table back fast to his leg as usual, so he had to face the music. John Gordon ran into the cook room and held the door, while the last seen of Wm. Kerr he was diving over the wood pile like a prarie dog going into his hole.

The Post Office war waxeth exceedingly hot and no time has been taken as yet to bury the dead or care for the wounded. The rules of civilized warfare have been abandoned and it is nothing unusual for a man to have his head cut off without even a trial by his peers if he fails to vanquish the enemy in the first round. Say boys, we would like to give a little advice if it will not be deemed impertinent by our friends. It is merely this. While trusting in superior numbers it is a good thing to keep your powder dry.

ONSTED ODDS.

Frank Darling's little girl, Fannie, has the scarlet fever.

The Grangers have another bee, Thursday afternoon, to finish lathing their hall. They will have a fine hall when it is completed.

Laur and Daniels shipped eighteen head of cattle from here last Friday that averaged 1250 pounds each.

Clarence Aten went to Napoleon Monday to commence his summer's work, having hired to a Mr. Palmer for whom he worked last summer.

Mrs. Robert Wooden is very low, and we hear that her friends have not much hopes of her recovery. Mrs. Wooden's health has been poor for some time.

Mr. C. Cooper received a telegram Monday evening stating that Melville Wood was dead. Mr. Wood married Miss Nealie Cooper about a year and a half ago. He had recently gone to railroading and died from injuries received while acting as brakeman.

BROOKLYN BALLASTS.

Were it not for some of the married people, who organized a strike last fall, we should have a monotonous spring, but their frequent change of base affords some side light glimpses of tied up felicity, that lends variety to dullness, and keeps the rest content with lesser ills.

Mont Hendershot, formerly of the Exponent, and now attached to a Cincinnati journal, has returned to Brooklyn for the wife hitherto unmentioned, but who is now by her father's death, left free to wear the name assumed long time ago. Gentlemen will please make a note of this case, as it proves a woman can keep a secret when needful.

Mr. Woodward still waits for his resignation to be sent him, and Doctor E. N. Palmer is Presiding Elder of the Council, though he has not looked all winter as if he could rule a cat. There has been no inauguration dance, fight or even growl over his election, which apathy is past explanation, because the singular past of our daily history, consists in its great amount of Law fullness, as compared with the present general debility of our citizens.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Another cold wave.

Did you all see the eclipse Monday?

Mr. — Onsted, of Onsted station, on the M. & O. road, was in our village Friday.

Miss Ada Linn, who has been visiting friends at Deerfield for a few weeks, returned Sunday. She is looking happy.

Miss Lou Arner is visiting friends in Dundee this week.

We see that there is a notice up announcing a special school meeting to be held next Monday night at the school house in district No. 1, for the purpose of electing a moderator and director to fill vacancies.

Mr. W. Clack, Rev. W. J. Clack's oldest son, came to see his parents Tuesday night.

Pres.—G. P. Waring.
Vice Pres.—Dr. R. H. Nelson.
Secretary—Miss Ella Cadmus.
Asst. Sec.—Miss Ada Linn.
Treasurer—Miss Ella Jackson.
Ex. Com.—J. D. Arner, Miss Kittie Clark.

Our village school closed on Tuesday afternoon. The scholars presented Mr. Stewart with a beautiful autograph album.

Remember the social is held at the home of Mrs. W. R. Wilson next Friday evening. A cordial invitation to all.

Some got the impression that our friend Mr. Williams, who bought Uncle John Schreeder's old farm, was going back to Colorado in the spring. We are glad to learn that it is not so. He will not leave before fall, if he does then.

Mr. Wm. C. Sharp, of Brooklyn, agent for the Wilcox & White organ Co., had one of their five octave parlor organs at the Literary Friday evening, for the society to try. They are thinking of purchasing soon.

Rev. J. M. Kerridge's lecture on Martin Luther, which he delivered at the Hall on Friday evening, was very instructive and interesting.—The attendance was good.

Mrs. G. W. Jackson returned home Friday night accompanied by Miss Josie Schreder, who made friends here a visit and returned home Monday in company with Miss Ella Jackson who will visit friends there this week.

A GLORIOUS SIGHT.

The Manner in Which the Native Newfoundland Deer Migrate From One Portion of the Island to Another.

SOUTHERN ALASKA.

The Peculiarities of the Climate and Scenery in Our Hyperborean Possessions.

Leaving Wrangle to battle with its frogs, we sailed through Wrangle Narrows, and later into the genial sunshine and past pleasant ones and by the side of steep cliffs over which fell streams of water, and above which towered peaks of snowy whiteness, glistening in the sunlight far away. There on the shores a fish cannery lay nestled among the trees, or a group of Indian huts was visible, while at times the native canoes were paddled out to us to enable their owners to offer bits of native manufacture. It was being cold, and fortunately a long succession of pleasant days greeted us as we moved lazily along our way. The air was soft yet exhilerating, the channels were filled with water as smooth as glass, the coloring was rich and the vegetation rich and abundant. Alaska, so often considered bleak, and bare and cold, appeared in its true light. Whatever it was elsewhere, here in the South at least it was warm and luxuriant, picturesque from guarded cove to distant peaks of snow which lighted up the blackness that existed, but threw no chill upon the region. The country is Switzerland enlarged, full of sharp contrasts in color studded with mountains of various shape and size. And here at Chicat, near the sixtieth degree of latitude there are serrated ranges with whitened heads shining above the forests that press down upon the waters of Pyramid Harbor, where we lie at anchor. Truly Alaska is, whatever it is not, a land of scenic wonders.—Portland Transcript.

—The latest novelty is ginger ice-cream, in which the heat of the ginger counteracts the chill of the cream, and the frigidity of the cream nullifies the fire of the ginger, producing a happy medium most gratifying to the epicurean palate.—Newton (N. J.) Register.

A QUIET MAN'S JOKE.

Amusing Incident of S. S. Conant's Experience on "The Times" Recalled.

When Stillman S. Conant was managing editor of the Times, a short time prior to the mysterious death of its chief editor, Henry J. Raymond, his first name was regarded as by no means a misnomer. He was the mildest-mannered managing editor that ever ordered a two-column article to be cut down to a paragraph. But quiet as his general demeanor was, he held the reins firmly and sharply curbed any tendency to undue friskiness on the part of the editorial team that he was driving. He could, however, take a joke and match it with another.

One cold night in the winter of 1869 the box in which copy for the editor was sent up stairs from the publication office suddenly shot up to the editorial rooms, and a sharp ring of the bell announced that it had arrived with something in it. Mr. Conant stepped to the box and took out a package, somewhat bulky, that looked as if it might contain something intended for publication. Looking at it closely he read these words on the envelope:

Mr. ———,
Night City Editor,
Give us a puff.

Mr. Conant's suspicions were at once aroused by this remarkable superscription. Could it be that the man who edited the city news was in collusion with some outsider who was sending him "a first-rate notice" for insertion in the news columns, smuggling it in without paying duty at the advertising desk? This was worthy of immediate investigation. He immediately sent for the man to whom the package was addressed and closely scanned his countenance while the latter opened the envelope.

And then the nature of the atrocious attempt to tamper with the press was made manifest. The contents were two fragrant cigars, wrapped in a piece of paper, on which were hastily scrawled the same words that appeared on the envelope—"Give us a puff." It was signed with the initials of D. O'C. Townley, a writer (since dead) who was at that time attached to the staff of the Times. The laugh that followed was at Mr. Conant's expense.

"Well," he said, joining in the general hilarity, "I think that is worth your notice," and lighting one of the cigars which was presented to him by the blue-pencil man of the City Room, he resumed his duties at his desk.

Shortly afterward, entering the room where the sub-editor was vigorously engaged in "boiling" copy, apparently deriving much aid and comfort in the operation from the cigar which he was silently puffing while the smoke wreaths curled above his head, like the steam from any other boiler. Mr. Conant said: "Well, I see that is sent up."

"Eh? what is?" asked the other.

"Why," said Mr. Conant, pointing to the fragrant clouds of tobacco smoke that floated overhead, "that is. That is scent up." The joke was flagrant, though timely, and to the man who, for the moment, had rested under the faint cloud of suspicion that was so speedily dispelled, it has been a fragrant memory ever since.—N. Y. Tribune.

A STORY OF A NEW ROSE.

The Origin of the Latest Product in Fine Floriculture.

The new rose, "Beauty of America," now the sensation in Washington, has a history. It is well known that Mr. Bancroft, the historian, has in his grounds at Washington one of the rarest and finest collection of roses in America. His gardener was privileged to take the seeds produced to experiment on, and thousands of plants were raised from these, but only one plant showed indications of excellence. This was a poor, tiny, neglected one, growing among others. It probably would have been lost to cultivation had it not been seen by a florist, who purchased the plant two years ago from the original grower for the sum of seventy-five cents! Two years in the hands of this florist has produced plants enough to sell this spring for $5,000, all of which are already sold to New York and Philadelphia in lots ranging from 500 to 1,000. These plants are but an inch high and cost $50 a hundred.

Such results are very encouraging to the originators of new varieties. Within two years three roses have been introduced here—the "Sunset" of last spring brought the originator $15,000; the "Bennett," of Philadelphia, will net $10,000, while the "Beauty of America" will bring $5,000.—Washington Star.

The Cuté London "Cop."

The London policemen seem to be of wonderfully truthful disposition for men who see so much of the worst side of human nature. One of them stopped an American the other day because he carried a "suspicious-looking" tin box. The officer wanted him to "swear on his honor" that it did not contain dynamite. The American "swore" and was allowed to proceed. Apparently the policeman reasoned that a man who carried dynamite could not lie about it. Such faith in the word of a stranger is touching and chivalrous, but over here such a policeman would be considered decidedly in need of salting.—N. Y. Tribune.

—'Squire Cristler, of Banks County, Ga., was called upon the other night to join a couple together in the holy bonds of matrimony. Getting to the river, he found it impossible to cross. Determined not to be disappointed, he summoned the couple to the water's edge on the other side of the stream, and the license, tied to a stone, having been pitched over to him, a distance of some sixty yards, he proceeded to tie the knot at the top of his voice.

—Vermont has a still unrepealed law on her statute books empowering her Justices of the Peace to order the collection of wheat at five shillings, rye at four shillings and Indian corn at four shillings per bushel to pay the salaries of certain specified preachers.—Troy Times.

An Editor's Reflections.

The editor of the Lockport Phœnix is responsible for the following. Who has not thought in about the same strain? And in our sober moments too:

Every once in a while something or other occurs which brings up before us feelings of other days; we are solemn—we indulge in retrospection and dream of "what might have been." And, while in the mood, other serious thoughts succeed, one to another, and we are prone to reflect on such sayings of the proverb-makers as "An hour once lost is gone forever," "What is past can never be recalled," etc., and we speculate as to the future even so much as to wish to raise the impenetrable veil that divides our life here from the shadowy realms beyond and know the mysteries that lie hidden there.

When we come to think seriously on the subject, what a confoundedly strange thing life is! What peculiar mysteries we ourselves are! that we cannot even "know ourselves." And yet one thing is pretty certain, viz, that each and every one of us can say with a very comfortable degree of assurance "I am," although a goodly number of our great and shining lights have expressed themselves doubtful of even that.

Suppose sometime, you or ourself, friend reader, should wake up and find we were somewhere else and learn that this earthly existence had been all "in our mind," as slang parlance hath expressed it. It would be strange would it not? And yet a dream seems even as real as this sometimes. But enough of conjecture such as this. We will take it for granted that all things are. There is room enough for guesswork left after that.

Not very long ago, you and the rest of us were babies, nothing but squalling, ugly looking little chunks of incipient humanity. We have ceased to be such, and can never be babies any more. Let us be thankful.

From babies in long clothes, as we grew older, we graduated, some into petticoats and some into breeches. We became school children. That was an epoch in our existence which we probably will never forget. What good times we used to have. How we played together; how we quarreled; how the breeches and petticoats fell in love with each other and then fell out again. We can recollect how we felt the first time we fell a victim to the tender passion. For a long time we worshipped at a distance, but when we found that our feelings were reciprocated we seemed to walk on air; and when we found an opportunity to perform the first osculation of our life—Gosh—but words are inadequate to express what feelings the operation gave rise to. We've got a lock of her hair yet, but she is married now, and to some other fellow. With some slight modifications this has probably been the experience of the majority. But those halcyon days are a thing of the past. As someone once remarked—How tempus does fugit, and right here perhaps it would be appropriate to quote Shakespeare:

"This world, you know
Is a fleeting show,
And this it is that round we go—
Like horses in a circus."

Perhaps the immortal William never wrote those words; in fact there is some doubt expressed as to whether W. S. was himself or somebody else. But the sentiment is good, and his "shade" need not get "upon its ear" because we have imputed it to him.

But here we are—men and women—and what the past has been we may as well relegate to some comfortable little nook in our memory and—drop it. What the future is to be we ourselves must decide, for are we not "the architects of our own fortune?" The best way to do it is perhaps, to "Trust no future howe'er pleasant,

Let the dead past bury its dead;
But act—act in the living present,
Heart within and God o'erhead."

Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for any fate.
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

Very Remarkable Recovery.

Mr. Gen. V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two Bottles of Electric Bitters, and is so much improved, that she is able now to do her own work." Electric Bitters will do all that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at C. A. Wright & Co.

Location of New School-Houses.

Select a site that is accessible to fresh air and sunlight; those facing to the West and South are the most desirable. 2. See that the location is elevated; not low and damp. 3. If in a city, ascertain whether the building is on natural or "made" soil. The latter is very unhealthy. 4. Have as much open ground around the school-house as possible. A school-house with a yard however small is much more pleasant than one without a yard; and have a garden if possible. 5. Ascertain with a certainty that the drainage is good. 6. Observe whether there are any bodies of stagnant water, or other contaminating influences near, and whether the prevailing direction of the wind will carry unwholesome vapors to the school-house. 7. Never choose a location so thickly surrounded with trees that the sun can never penetrate the rooms. Such places are very unhealthy. 8. Be sure that the water supply is abundant and pure in every respect.

When the blood is loaded with impurities, and moves sluggishly in the veins, an alternative is needed, as this condition of the vital fluid cannot last long without serious results. There is nothing better than Ayer's Sarsaparilla to purify the blood, and impart energy to the system.

A little dot of a girl coaxed two nickels from her father on Thanksgiving day, saying she would use one for candy and the other she would give to the missionaries. Before executing her expressed intentions she lost one while at play, and running to her mamma, said: "Oh, mamma, I have lost my missionary nickel."

For over eight year I have suffered from catarrh, which has affected my eyes and hearing; have employed many physicians without relief. I am now on my second bottle of Ely's Cream Balm, and feel confident of a complete cure—Mary C. Thompson, Cerro Gordo, Piatt Co., Ill.

For all forms of nasal catarrh where there is dryness of the air passage with what is commonly called 'stuffing up' especially when going to bed, Ely's Cream Balm gives perfect and immediate relief. Its benefit to me has been priceless.—A. G. Chase, M. D., Millwood Kansas.

Not a Trace.

Dr. D. F. Penington, D. D. S., West Fayette street, Baltimore, Maryland, states that he has personally used the Red Star Cough Cure and in his family, and has found it a prompt and sure remedy for coughs and colds. No bad results of other cough remedies. Not a trace of opium or morphia.

The Bible has been translated into Zulu language.

C. A. Wright & Co. wish to make an assertion, which they can back with a positive guarantee. It is all about Acker's Blood Elixir. They claim for it superior merits over all other remedies of its kind, and guarantee for it a positive and sure cure for Rheumatism Syphillis, and all blood disorders. It frees the skin from spots and disease, and leaves the complexion clear. Ask them about it.

As late as 1840 there were but seven vocations into which New England women had entered; in 1884 the number was 317.

Now they speak of Crude Petrolium as a remedy for consumption; better not try it, but take Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup—the standard cough remedy of our age. It is agreeable to the taste, never fails to cure, and costs only 25 cents a bottle.

There are more than 600 varieties of the chrysanthenum, the national flower of Japan.

NOTES FROM THE PACIFIC STATES

San Jose, March [illegible] 1885
Editor Herald.—

[illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Tate got home last week and Capt Lawrence will prolong his stay a week or ten days more.

A HERALD scribe sought an interview with Mr. S. P. Hosmer yesterday who acted as captain and spokesman of "The Dozen" and got a few notes descriptive of their five days' sojourn at New Orleans.

"I have already told you about our trip down," said Mr Hosmer, and will begin where I left off in my last letter. On the morning of our arrival in the Crescent City we took breakfast at the rooms of the Womans' Christian Association where we were handsomely entertained. We took permanent quarters on the packet Geneva, a fine river steamer plying between the city and the exposition ground, seven miles distant. We were charged $1.75 for day board and lodging and had free transportation between the city and the grounds, which made a very pleasant and economical arrangement for us. The boat made four trips daily, leaving the city on the first trip at 10 o'clock A. M. and returning on the last trip at 5.30 P. M. Hence [illegible] had each evening and two hours in the morning to stroll about the city. I cannot go into detail, but will give you a few general hints in regard to the Exposition. It is certainly "a big show," and well worth the time and expense which it costs to visit it. The grounds are beautifully laid out.

The main building covers thirty acres of ground, and nearly every foot of available space is taken by exhibitors. Art, science and business are represented here by hundreds of enterprising firms from all over the United States and Europe. Among the most noticable and attractive exhibits is a mammoth exhibit of stoves and ranges from the Michigan and Detroit Stove works.

Early in December last Melville G. Wood removed to Adrian for the purpose of obtaining employment, but circumstances which often occur did not have the desired effect and about six weeks ago he obtained a position as brakeman on a freight train of the L. S. & M. S. railroad. Sunday, the 9th inst. Melville, while doing his duty, strained himself internally, which confined him to his bed, and his death was the result. He leaves a large circle of friends who will mourn his untimely death. His funeral was held on the 18th inst. at his father's residence in Wolf Creek, and was largely attended.

LONGFELLOW MEMORIAL EXERCISES.

Next Tuesday, March 24th, the anniversary of the death of the poet, Henry W. Longfellow, will be commemorated by the schools of the village with appropriate exercises. All the departments in the central building will take part in the program on Tuesday afternoon. The exercises in the branch buildings will be deferred until Friday afternoon, March 27th. This is done in order to accommodate those who may wish to attend the exercises in the central building and branch buildings also.

The program will consist of biographical sketches, eulogies, reviews of his writings, declamations, quotations from his writings and music. We are unable to give the program in full, but it promises to be a very interesting one. A cordial invitation is extended to everybody to be present.

Late in the evening it was found that the horse had broken the halter and gone home. But the plucky husbands bundled their wives into the cutter and getting inside the shafts, drew the cutter home themselves. The sight, it is said, was "enough to make the horse laugh."

Adamson Bros' have bought out Fred Keip's stock of books, wall paper, notions, etc., and will hereafter control the entire store. Mr. Keip returns to Toledo. This addition to their stock will give them one of the most complete jewelry and book stores in Southern Michigan and they will spare no pains to keep fully up with the times in their line of trade. They will doubtless receive the patronage to which they are so well entitled.

A large crowd of citizens was at the park east of Elliott's blacksmith shop last evening to witness the exhibition with the Harden hand grenade. A pile of boards and shavings covered with oil was set on fire and allowed to burn a few minutes and a couple of the grenades were then broken in the flames which were immediately extinguished. In case of a small fire we should think the grenade would be a handy thing to have around.

The repairs upon the Opera House are now completed. The new floor is laid of seasoned hard wood and has been put in fine shape to skate on. The furnace registers, which formerly were placed in the floor, have been removed to the side walls, so that there will be no obstructions whatever on the floor. A skate and ticket room has been fixed up under the east stair case, a ticket window having been cut through the wall between this room and the main audience room. The inside wood work has been treated to a coat of paint and a general renovation has taken place. The formal opening of the new rink will occur to-morrow evening. Manager Sutton has been to considerable expense in fitting up the building for a first class rink, and the skating portion of the public should reward him therefor by a liberal patronage.

FROM TECUMSEH TO SAN FRANCISCO.

Mrs. N. M. Sutton returned last week from her trip to San Francisco. A reporter of the HERALD took the liberty to call upon her the other day and solicit a few "notes" descriptive of her journey. He enjoyed a pleasant chat of nearly an hour with Mrs. Sutton, and learned many things about the western country which were new to him. We are permitted to give our readers the substance of the conversation.

"I have no ambition to appear in print," said Mrs. Sutton, "but still I must admit that I enjoyed the trip wonderfully well, and I have no objections to giving you a few items. Only try to spell the Spanish names correctly and make your story as brief as possible."

"I left home on Friday, the 23rd day of January, and went first to Chicago via the Wabash line. Here I made a short tarry of about two days to see a few of the sights of this growing Western metropolis. I there took the Burlington route, and went to Newton, Iowa, where I spent one day with E. H. Hoeg's family, and had a very pleasant visit with them. Ed is now engaged in the banking business at Newton and seems to be prospering abundantly. From that point I proceeded to Kansas City, and took a short detour to Edwardsville, thirteen miles distant, where I stayed over night with Edwin Taylor's family. Coming back to Kansas City, I took the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fee road; my next stop was at Las Vegas, New Mexico. The celebrated Las Vegas springs are situated seven miles from the railroad. I spent three days at this resort most delightfully. The springs are 6,500 feet above tide water, and the climate is superb. It seemed as though the air was purer, the sky bluer, the stars brighter, than in any other town I ever visited.—This resort is visited by pleasure seekers and invalids from all sections of the country. There are two magnificent hotels, each capable of accommodating several hundred guests.—The new hotel called the Montzeuma, is now in course of construction, which will be ready for the public about April 1st. The water of the springs is a great curative for most chronic ailments, especially rheumatism, and hundreds of invalids are found here at all seasons of the year. During my stay here I took a ride in the saddle up the mountians about 1-500 feet above the springs, on a buro, a species of Mexican mule. Had a delightful ride which I shall long remember. From Las Vegas I turned my face towards the setting sun, and after three days' journey, arrived at Los Angeles, where I spent two days in that garden of flowers and orange groves. Thence to San Francisco.

The growth of this city during the past thirty years is something wonderful, and large cities have sprung up across the bay, which are properly suberbs of San Francisco. I passed five days here with pleasure and profit, and could keep you half a day telling the story of those five days, but the recital would be wearisome. During my stay here I visited Zeno Kelley's family in Oakland. They went from Tecumseh 32 years ago. Mrs. Kelley is sick, and cannot live long.

From there I went to San Jose, where the principal visit of my journey was made. This is a beautiful city. Here I found J. W. Patterson and family and Elwood Comfort and daughter Sadie, so that I felt quite at home. I hired rooms in the same house occupied by Mr. Comfort and his daughter, and made it my home there for two weeks. During these two weeks, excursions of a day or two were made in different directions. One day I visited Monterey, a beautiful resort on the sea coast, situated below San Jose. There is a hotel here with five hundred rooms and a magnificent drive on the beach. This city is becoming one of the most fashionable resorts on the Pacific coast. Another day I went to Felton to see the big trees. Mr. Patterson and his family accompanied me on this excursion and it was enjoyed by all of us I assure you. Another day I visited Alum-rock, about seven miles off, a favorite drive up the mountains and drank of the water of three different springs.

The weather was beautiful during the entire two weeks of my sojourn at San Jose, and every day was utilized to the best advantage for visiting and sight-seeing.

I made all the little detours on my outward trip and came home "flying." I left San Francisco at three o'clock P. M. on Friday. Did not miss a single train on the way, and arrived in Detroit the next Wednesday night at 12:30, having accomplished one of the quickest trips ever made between those two cities. It has been my ambition for several years to visit California, and see the snow-capped Rockies. The journey had been anticipated with pleasure, but it more than met my expectations. I am glad to get home, of course, and yet am frank to admit that I never enjoyed a journey as well. I was absent from home just seven weeks. I have already booked a resolve in my diary to repeat the trip at some convenient time in the future."

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday evening, March 6th, the Farmers' Social Club met at the residence of Mr. A. D. Hall. There was a large attendance of the club and quite a number of visitors. The Program was good and well carried out. Music by the choir. Select reading by Hattie Horton. Recitation by Leva Gillespie. "Curfew will not ring to-night," which was admirably spoken with one exception, it was spoken rather too low to be heard throughout Mr. Hall's large parlors. Singing by Kitt Griswold, like all Kitt's efforts, was good. Chip basket by Anna Everhart, a large basket and well filled. Instrumental music by Eva Rector and Kirt Griswold, a very nice performance. Essay by I. H. Schreder was a well written production. It was mostly a reply to papers written by Mr. Wilson of Franklin, "Does farming pay at present prices", and one written by Fay DePuy, wherein the writer advised no one to buy more land than he could pay down for. Mr. Schreder thought that an industrious economical, go ahead man was safe in buying a farm of 80 or 160 acres of land if he had enough to pay one-half down, with reasonable time and fair interest on the balance.

Mr. Hall led the discussion on the question, "is it right to require persons to pay taxes on property they are in debt for." Mr. Hall said that if property was exempt to the owner or occupier that they were in debt for, there would be a very large amount of property that could not be taxed at all. He instanced the merchant that owed for his goods perhaps in the city of New York. Said the merchant paid quite a large proportion of the taxes, as the law now stands. Also grain in transit. He thought there was no injustice done to a land owner if he was in debt for half of his farm, if he paid taxes on the whole. Thought if the money loaner or mortgage holder was honest and paid taxes on the mortgage, it would lessen the heft of taxes on the land owner so that he would have no cause to complain. For example, suppose A. buys a farm worth $20,000 and mortages to C for $10,000 purchase money, and B buys a farm for $10,000 and mortages to C for $5,000 which would make the land worth $30,000 to pay taxes on, and then C would have to pay taxes on $15,000 of money loaned to buy this land, which would make the farmers taxes about one-third less or in other words, there would be a tax raised on $45,000 instead of just the two farms worth $30,000. Thought if the farmer had a rebate on his taxes to the amount of his mortgaged indebtedness it would have a tendency to make the farmer dishonest for he would be very apt to put in the whole amount of the mortgage after he had made payments thereby doing an injustice to his creditor.

Mr. Kehoe could not see any justice in taxing one-third more property than really existe, because C having loaned to A and B $15,000 that they used to pay, for their farms worth $30,000 did not make $45,000 worth of property. Either A and B ought to have a rebate on the amount they borrowed of C, or else C ought to be exempt from taxation. Said the fact was that the money lender did not pay taxes on but very little they had loaned out. They kept it so well covered up that the assessors did not get it on their roll. Said that the property of the farmer, both real and personal estate was where the assessor could see it, and consequently it all got taxed. Thought there was a hitch in the law somewhere. Looked to him as though the law was all in favor of the rich man or else the assessors did not do their duty

Mr. Everhart thought it would not do to give the farmer a rebate on the amount of land that he was in debt for. For instance, suppose a man bought a farm here and borrowed money in Ohio; he would have to pay interest on the money according to the laws of Ohio and therefore the money lender could not be compelled to take a tax receipt in place of money for interest on his mortgage. And farther, he thought it would be unjust to exempt the farmer from paying tax on the lands he owned and used whether he was in debt for them or not.

Mr. Schreder could see no injustice in making the mortgagee pay the tax to the amount of his mortgage as in reality that was his interest in the land. Was very sure that all mortgages had to be paid according to the laws of the state where the property mortgaged was situated, no matter where the person lived loaning the money.

Club adjourned for three weeks to meet at the residence of Mr. I. H. Schreder Friday evening, March 27th. This being our last regular meeting of the season there will be a picnic supper. All are invited to attend and bring along their goodies. Mrs. Schreder will furnish the coffee, sugar, cream and butter. The literary program as arranged for the meeting:

ALBION COLLEGE.

ALBION, Mich. March 16, 1885.

EDITOR HERALD.—Last Saturday evening occured one of the pleasantries of 'Albion College Life.' The event was the usual term reception tendered to the students by President Fiske, D. D., LL. D., at his fine and spacious new residence. At an early hour the students began to arrive; and, after removing their wraps, they were conducted into the presence of the Doctor and his estimable Lady, where they were heartily received, and welcomed to the hospitality of the house. The parlors were thrown open, and the guests, after singing a few lively 'College Songs,' spent the evening in social chatting, interspersed with entertaining little games. At an early hour they began to disperse, each one wishing the host and hostess a pleasant good night, and many happy returns of these pleasant gatherings. This was one of the pleasant evenings which will long be remembered by all who were there, especially by your correspondent, who was there.

FASHIONABLE BREVITIES.

Bits of Information Especially Pleasing to Those Who Would Dress a La Mode.

Blouse fronts are made of Irish tatting.

Chevoits for spring wear are in all shades of brown and tan and in grays.

Heliotrope is the fashionable color and perfume, as well as the fashionable flower.

Frise velvets are combined with fine black cashmere. They form the vest and the underskirt.

Cream and black laces are preferred for evening wear, although guipure is shown in all colors.

Lace brocade is a new dress fabric for warm weather, and has all the good qualities of the mohairs.

The most popular woolen suits consist of a draped skirt, a basque bodice and a jacket for out-door wear.

Paris still decrees that the trimming of the two sides of the dress, bodice as well as skirt, must not be alike.

Mohairs and lusters are in all shades of brown, gray and mode, in shot and illuminated effects and in stripes.

Crepe lisse with fine plaits, edged with gilt, crystal or pearl beads, is worn at the neck and sleeves of silk dresses.

The tasteless combination of stuffed Java sparrows with the fairy-bells of the lily of the valley continues in vogue.

Materials for cloaks are in two-toned arabesque designs in brown, beige and fawn color, and in plaids of all shades.

Plaid surahs are shown in great variety. Those with alternating satin and surah stripes and with brocaded checks are very effective.

Waist-linings of good quality are to be had, cut out of any desired size, thus saving much labor to those who do dressmaking at home.

A black velvet dress has a plain skirt, with wide jet passementerie about the hem, the edge of the basque bodice having the same trimming, but narrower.

French all-wool light-weight goods for evening wear are in great variety. Among them are new veilings with a smooth surface, summer ottomans and sangher, a very beautiful fabric.

Plain woolen materials are accompanied by striped goods which may be combined at pleasure with the color of the ground or of either of the stripes, making either a light or dark costume.

Gold will continue in vogue as trimming, and when intelligently used is very effective. Prof. Fischer, a German authority in æsthetic matters, says: "A touch of metal ennobles the costume, but it must be applied by a master hand; too much is vulgarity."

A visiting dress of navy blue satin has a plaiting of navy blue velvet around the edge of the skirt. The drapery is of navy blue satin, thickly covered with cardinal red chenille spots. A blue plush jacket, trimmed with feathers, is worn with this, and there is a toque to match.

The upper part of dress skirts is to be puffed; the single puff sometimes reaching from the waist nearly to the knee. Some of the dresses have the puff beginning at the side and continuing diagonally across the front. In others the puff is like the deep jacket-basque, shorter in the back than in front.

An evening dress of rose-colored faille, has the flounces cut in the shape of rose leaves, under which are valenciennes flounces. The over-dress and bodice are embroidered with pink flowers. The rest is of valenciennes lace, and on its left side are gracefully looped pink satin ribbons.

A heliotrope plush tea gown is lined with pale blue satin and opens over a plastron of crepe de chine of the palest possible shade of blue. The folds of the crepe are drawn to the left side of the tablier and held in position by long loops and ends of heliotrope velvet ribbon, pale blue on the reverse side.

Some of the new woolen dress goods are noticeable. Those with geometrical designs, palm leaves and rose buds of bright colors, blending with the soft gray or dark blue of the ground of the material, are combined with plain fabrics in the ground tint of the figured goods in suits with short mantles.

Some fanciful designs in sleeves are shown by Parisian modistes. One has the outer seam open from the wrist to the elbow. Another has a lozenge-shaped piece cut out of the top. The inner seam of a sleeve reaching to the elbow is left unsewed, and it is held together by knots of ribbon fastened at regular intervals.

A handsome fichu is made of jetted lace, which forms a turn-down collar, and thence is shaped to the waist over a net foundation. Below the waist line the ends of the lace are joined together, making a nice finish. At the joining of the collar a number of ribbon loops fall over a full jabot of plain lace, which reaches just below the bust.

Broaches have all manner of shapes, from the round ones of years ago to the attenuated bars of the past few seasons. Quaint conceits are constantly seen. An enormous hook-and-eye inlaid with small but very brilliant diamonds, and a golden ape with ruby eyes and diamond paws holding fruit made of emeralds, are among the exceedingly realistic designs.

A very beautiful dress of ruby velvet is made with a long train. The side panels are gold-colored satin, covered with a net-work of fine gold and red cord; each knot is covered by a tiny gold bead, from which depends a tassel of ruby beads. The bodice is cut low and is trimmed with gold and red net-work. The sleeves are simply rows of the ruby and gold beads.

The panier petticoat has been much improved. It is made of white cotton goods, black and striped satine, and the striped and plain skirting materials. The lower flounce is very deep and has four springs; the flounces above are narrow with one spring each. The tournure is connected with the lower flounce by a band fastened to each spring. The springs may be withdrawn when the skirt is to be washed, and new ones may be inserted when they are broken. The advantage of this petticoat is that there are no springs in the body of the skirt, that it yields to every movement of the wearer, instantly returning to shape after pressure, and does not crush.

The latest novelties in jerseys present some patterns that are noteworthy. These are the fantail, the Fedora front, the evening dress coat, which is very similar in cut to a gentleman's full-dress coat, the combination, coat and vest, the latter either to match or of a different color, and a few others. The trimming used for these useful articles is broad and narrow braid, or gold and silver cord, put on in military style and giving a dashing appearance to the garment. Jerseys are made not alone of wool, but also of a new material known as "lisle thread jersey cloth," which is of wonderful strength and has a finish and fineness approaching silken fabrics. This new material is likely to be very popular.

GRASS.

The Proper Preparation of Land For Grass.

Where land is intended to be seeded down, whether in connection with a grain crop or without, it should receive extra attention in order to favor the increased demand of the double crop of the grain and the forage plant, or the latter if sown alone so as to secure not only a good catch and a good start, but to continue the growth and sustain the plant during the drought which seldom fails to occur. In this way a fair to good crop is realized the same season it grown without an accompanying grain crop, with the prospect of an increased yield the following season, to be further kept up with manure, which, if properly applied, will suffer no loss on grass lands, the network of roots which forms the sod appropriating all, time in such case being allowed for this. Further, a good cover of grass will prevent the rays of the sun and the drying winds from getting access to the ground, and will hold the dew and the moisture of rain longer. The main loss of moisture is what the plants themselves take from the soil, and the greater the quantity the better, as it is a measure of the growth of the crop. This measure applies to the roots of the plant as well, which penetrate deeply if favored by culture, and this culture, deep and mellow, is necessary, when it is considered what an amount of water grass takes from the soil, the process going on during the entire season, from early spring till late fall, the grains occupying but half that time. Deep culture is therefore of more importance in growing a grass crop than one of grain. As in our drougthy climate we do not obtain the requisite amount of moisture from the air, we must seek for it in the ground, and only in its depth can it be obtained. In this way heavy crops and a good sod are secured, the sod when turned down, still further benefiting the land by introducing vegetable matter, which distributed through it is one of the best means of favoring moisture. This prepares the ground not only for further growing grass or clover, or any other forage crop, but in a superior manner grain, including wheat, if the soil is composed largely of clay.

The growing of sod, as is well known to good farmers, is one of the principal means of improving land, as the dairy regions have long since shown in this country and grazing in England. Badly reduced land has been renovated and made profitably productive in the clay loams of Central New York by a single two years' course of clover aided only by plaster, good yield of hay being realized at the same time. So, with a fair set of grass—which can be obtained on worn-out land only by early sowing on winter grain in the spring or, better, on land prepared in autumn without the grain—a good sod has been secured in a few years by the use of mineral manures adapted to the land. The value of the fertilizers was realized in the crops grown, while the main benefit—vegetable matter in the soil—was secured in the sod, where farm manure was wanting. But all this must be preceded by a good preparation of the soil, communuting and deeply working it, which will tell in future years in its favor, just as bad treatment will still further reduce it.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

One Woman's Life Work.

Mrs. Mary Pruyn, who died at Albany last week, was a descendant of General Israel Putnam. When only twenty-eight years of age she founded the Industrial School at Albany, where destitute children are educated by voluntary contributions. A fine building was recently erected for the school. She was also the founder of a Home for Unfortunate Women, the Mother's Mission, and the Fruit and Flower Mission. In 1871, under the auspices of the Woman's Union Missionary Society of New York, she established the American Mission Home for Girls at Yokohama, Japan; and during her residence there of nearly five years this mission resulted in Christianizing hundreds of Japanese young women. She returned home in 1876, and the ensuing six years of her life were devoted to home missionary work and the establishment of branches of the Woman's Union Missionary Society in the churches. In December, 1882, at the earnest solicitation of that society, she went to China, and reorganized at Shanghai the "Bridgman Home," a school similar to that in Yokohama and established a hospital for women. She reached her home in September last in failing health.—Chicago Tribune.

Winter Evenings on the Farm.

I remember to have read somewhere how some Italian artist gathered up all the bits of broken glass cast aside in building a cathedral, and how from these pieces, trimmed, arranged and set in order, he constructed one of the most beautiful windows found in Italy. What others had cast aside as useless, he took up and from it wrought out the beautiful, and the useful.

Boys and girls on the farm, as everywhere else, let run to waste many bits of time, spare moments, hours, evenings which if they would but turn to good use, might be made to serve the noblest purpose. But the trouble is to get at it, to have some plan of working over these spare hours. How can the evenings be turned to use, and the best use? Of course one can doze them away sitting before the fire, can gossip, play checkers, and so on, but this is not the best use, nor the best way to spend long evenings. An occasional evening spent in this way may be good, but to thus let all these passing spare hours slip by is to waste life. And at the end of ten years of spare hours what have we to show?

Let me suggest a simple plan for utilizing evenings; and let me suggest it out of my own experience, for I do not know what our experience is good for if it is not to help others. It often comes too late, to help us. And now, the fact that you are on a farm, is a great advantage for using your evenings. I know this from experience both of farm life and city life. In the city there is something to break in on your plans all the time. In the country your evenings are comparatively free, at least an hour or two for each evening, and you can set aside this time if you plan before hand to do so. We can do it in the city, but it is more easily done in the country.

I know now what objections you begin to offer: "I am too tired, too sleepy, have too much else to do," and all this. Yes, but all these obstacles fade out of sight if we only take hold of the work with a purpose. For those who do not care to make the most and best of life, these suggestions of mine will have little value. But here and there possibly they may find a young man or woman to whom they may be helpful. If so, I have my reward, in endeavoring to do for others what I would that some one had done for me when I was a boy on the farm struggling for ways and means toward gaining an education.

The problem is, how to get time? And the only answer is, "take it." Take time; that is the only way you will ever have time for anything. Lay your plan, write it out and solemnly sign your name to it, if it will thus make it more binding, to spend at least an hour every evening in reading some good book. You will have interruptions, but persist in your plan, and soon other things will yield and you can pass from one hour's reading to two. And you can hardly imagine how much good may come to you from these few hours spent over a good book. They will follow you all the days of your life. You will look back to them in after years with sweet reflections and pleasant memories. No one of you who may read this is likely to find greater difficulties in working this plan than I did as a boy. I remember well how my first interest was awakened in history, an interest which has never left me, because commenced early in life and against great obstacles. Yes, the very difficulties I met with added zest to the task, and I have lived long enough now to see that these very hindrances were to me blessings in disguise. They gave me then and have continued all these years to give me a sense of victory over difficulties and, you notice in your own experience every difficulty mastered gives you strength and nerve, and tone for still greater difficulties. Stop not, then, for these little obstacles; rise above them, and in the mastery and hope and courage for future struggles.

I was at work on a farm by the month, and for a man who was unhappy if a boy in the house was sleeping after four o'clock in the morning, or came in from his chores before seven in the evening. And yet, having signed the solemn compact with myself to read history one hour each evening, I did it, though it was a terrible thorn in the flesh for the head of the family to see the tallow candle wasting away for such foolish business as reading. He would often upbraid me with "What y' goin' to do with yer larnin', when y' git it?" But on I pressed with my plan, and I have come now to thank God, not only for the obstacles overcome, but for a sense of strength and courage, that has helped me in many another struggle of life. And it is this sense of strength from victories won which I would bring to bear upon every young man who may be wrestling with the same or similar difficulties.

THE GIANTS' CAUSEWAY.—The Giants Causeway is in the County Antrim, on the northeast coast of Ireland, between Portgore Head and Port Rush. For some seven or eight miles along that coast there are cliffs of basalt, many of which are made up in great part of rude vertical columns, which alternate with layers of amorphous beds of the same class of rocks, and ranges of these in places reach the height of 400 or 500 feet. When these are viewed in front from the sea they suggest rude resemblances to architectural forms. The name of Giants' Causeway is often applied to the whole coast range, although it is properly applicable to but a small portion of it. It is a platform of basalt, composed of closely arranged columns, ranging from 15 to 36 feet in height, and it extends from a steep cliff down into the sea, till it is lost below low-water mark. Its length exposed at low-water is about 600 feet, and it is divided into three portions, called the Little, Middle, and Large or Grand Causeway.

CHINA—FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

Celestials in great numbers, officers, delegates and civilians from the interior, as far up the Ra Sin river as Te Cu See and the region intervening that distant point and the frontier, all imbued with the same spirit of self sacrifice and determination to win for themselves and their country the applause of mankind, on the 16th of March began to assemble. They took possession of the country to the east of a place called Du En Da with headquarters at a well fortified, elegant and spacious suburban villa occupied by one Rapp Lye Eye, that is to say, at the farm house of Joseph Stowell, now occupied by Mr. & Mrs. E. W. Rappleye, who were found ready to entertain their friends from Tecumseh, Ridgeway and Dundee, the occasion being the 20th anniversary of their wedded life. The M. & O. train brought the friends from up the Rai Sin at an early hour, and the Dundee people came in about 2 P.M. All were bountifully served at dinner with all that the season could supply or the "American idea" suggest. General conversation with sallies of wit and repartee occupied the time, Mrs. La Longee of Dundee and Mr. F. Davidson taking the lead in the free for all contest. The lady hit hard to right and left and made some telling thrusts upon the broad front of her adversary. But who can stand before Francisco with his dictionary for a weapon. The lady gracefully withdrew from the contest with the applause of friends, while convulsions, tears and laughter were left to end the fray. The ceremony was performed by Justice Wm. H. Arner in a service borrowed from the German, and which was the occasion of great mirth.

There was presented in an appropriate speech by Mr. Wilkinson for the friends from Tecumseh and Ridgeway:

Tea set, sauce dish, pickle castor, Miss Maynard; table castor, Jonas Rappleye; gold certificate $10, Sam'l Rappleye; friends from Dundee, one bed room set, 2 sets knives and forks; cake dish, Stowell Bros.; $7 cash, E. Stowell and others; pillow shams, Miss Williams; vase of flowers, Misses C. & M. Wilson; tea set, Mr. & Mrs. C. W. Mead, Kansas.

BAKING POWDER TRAMPS.

The danger to the public health from the indiscriminate use of the many lime and alum baking powders of commerce has been so fully exposed that everybody desires to avoid them. As "forewarned is forearmed," housekeepers will thank us for apprising them of the special efforts at present being made to dispose of such powders in this vicinity.

The proprietors of some of the worst of these powders are now going from house to house, trying by means of a trick, or so-called test, with heat and water, to show that their article is as good as the Royal Baking Powder, making the comparison with this brand because everybody recognizes it as absolutely pure and wholesome, the object, of course, being to supply their brand in place of the Royal, which housekeepers have for so many years relied upon to puff up the morning biscuit, and to make the light, palatable and wholesome roll, cake and pastry for which it is famous.

The housekeeper will do well to be on her guard against these baking powder tramps. Every intelligent person knows that any goods peddled from house to house in this manner, or that are given away in samples, or sought to be introduced by secretly traducing the character of other goods well known to be pure and reliable, have no merits of their own, and have failed to find purchasers through legitimate means.

We are informed, as a matter of fact, that one of these tramps is trying to introduce a powder that has been found by the Government chemist to be 11.85 per cent lime, while the other peddles a powder that is 20 per cent alum—one a powerful caustic, the other a corrosive poison.

No such tricks or jugglery will be apt to deceive any intelligent person. The housekeeper who has used the Royal Baking Powder ever since she discarded cream of tartar and soda, knows more about its quality than any tramp in the country can teach her. The crucial test to which she has put the Royal Baking Powder—the test of actual and successful work in the preparation of pure and wholesome food, under which it has never failed—is entirely satisfactory. She has always had "good luck" with it in making light, sweet and delicious bread, biscuit, and cake, and has placed it, to stay, at the head of her housekeeping favorites. She knows that it has been officially approved by the Government chemists as the best, and we imagine that the baking powder tramp who attempts to supplant its place in her confidence will find this a bad year for his business.

The AMERICAN BAZAR, New York, for March, just received, is a brilliant number of this popular ladies' paper. Its fashion illustrations are superb, its literary contents excellent, its whole make-up clean and interesting, in short it is emphatically a paper suited to the home circle. All this makes it amply worth its almost nominal subscription price of only One Dollar a year, but not satisfied with giving so much for so little, its proprietors offer a choice from a list of premiums which is really wonderful. As a sample, 37 complete stories by best writers, or 65 pieces of popular music (words and notes), or a dictionary that retails for One Dollar, etc. We advise our lady readers to send 10c. for a sample copy and see it for themselves.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for April is a particularly interesting number, and he who does not find much in it to please him must be very hard to suit. Indeed the whole number is exceptionally good. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York, at 25 cents a number, or $2,50 a year, postpaid.

CELERY CULTURE SIMPLIFIED.—The tedious task of digging trenches to plant celery in, and afterward the great labor of banking it up to blanch, prevents thousands of private gardeners from growing this delicious vegetable. This year there is offered to the public a new sort known as Nellis's Self Blanching Celery, which can be grown as easily as a head of cabbage or lettuce, and requires that only a little earth should be drawn up around the stalks, similar to hilling corn, and remain a couple of weeks to have extra choice blanched celery of the finest quality. This easy culture saves two thirds of the time required to cultivate and blanch the old green sorts. This new variety is distinct, and is of a beautiful cream white color, and crisp and tender. The introducers offer to send a packet, valued at 20 cents, of this rare sort to any one sending the names and addresses of five persons who take pride in a garden, parties who grow vegetables for market preferred, and also a two-cent stamp to pay for postage and packing. They will also send free to any one who desires it their large ninety-six page Illustrated Garden and Floral Instructor for 1885, which has a fine plate of this new celery, and describes it at length. Their address is A. C. Nellis & Co., growers of the famous brand of Mohawk Valley Seeds, Canajoharie, N. Y.

President Cleveland is starting out reasonably well but we would respectfully suggest that there should be a change at once in the chief clerk of the weather bureau. Zero weather the middle of March is not the right kind of reforin.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The only marked change since the Eclipse is, people are crosser about the improved coldness. Most of them looked through a glass darkly, and saw no springtime coming, though birds whistle about it, and those who mean to wage war with hard times, are calling for settlement of accounts, as if determined to reconstruct their business, whether other folks' air castles collapse or not. The doctrine of self-preservation is the only Orthodoxy practiced, though a large number went to hear Rev. Talmadge. Perhaps they saw the bright side of things as presented by him; but forgot to bring back their impressions for everyday use. J. Morrison, however, sees rose-color through the gloom. He has received a liberal amount of back pay and pension money, but some ex-soldiers here that donated the best of their lives to the union cause, are less fortunate and are dependent on the charity of friends or the Supervisor. Personal articles are always disagreeable to somebody and I am frequently asked to mention two cases that from long neglect have become vexatious. One of them is Irvin Crane, who belonged to two or three different regiments, served good time; lost his sight and acquired a brain disease by so doing. He has a wife and half dozen children; the latter too small to assist him, and they have been entirely supported by charity for three years, and I think longer. The other man has a crippled hand that is ceaseless torture and disables him from work of any kind. He boards with Uriah Kelly at public expence and Mr. Griswold soothes the temper of those who want him forwarded to the County house with the promise, that the town shall be reimbursed if he ever gets a pension. Both these men applied long ago; but the Commissioner is too bashful to aid them without an introduction. It is expected he will hasten slowly, and exact reasonable proof of worthiness to protect the nation from imposition; but why does the government impose upon its servitors by commissioning men to manage their business who make such signal failures of engineering their own. An agent who succumbs to the necessity of going on a three months spree four times a year, don't have time enough to quarrel with his wife as much as he wants to, and a nation's gratitude rusts while he leads the forlorn hope and debars others from helping.

Mr. A. has, during the past year, been identified with the Congregational church here as its pastor, during which time his labors have been zealous and successful. A large circle of friends, including the best families of the place, have learned to esteem his society and his labors and it is with many regrets that they bid him adieu.

THE OTHER SIDE.

At the request of a Macon farmer, we print the following on the Bohemian Oat question taken from the Grange Visitor:

BRO. COBB:—Seeing several communications in the Visitor concerning the Bohemian oats, I thought it my duty to say a few words about the matter. In the spring of 1884 I purchased some of this kind of oats, and, contrary to the statements of some of the correspondents of the Visitor, the grain was represented as a valuable crop for the farmer to raise; representing the oats to yield from twenty-five to fifty bushels per acre, and that one bushel was equal to three bushels of the common oats for feeding any kind of stock, and that they were worth one dollar per bushel at the oat meal mills. And, certainly, this is not without some showing of being the fact, as they weigh fifty lb to the bushel, and being hulless, are very near at least, three times the weight of common oats after the hulls and light oats are taken out. I can find good men and farmers, who will say that it is their honest opinion that two quarts of the Bohemian oats are equal to six of the common oats as horse feed, and not go to Ohio for them, either.

I sowed my seed on two different pieces or parcels of land: one of a little less than an acre, which was fall plowed and put in good shape, yielded over forty bushels, besides being badly lodged down by a heavy wind storm about the time of heading out, there being two or three large patches that had very little, if any, grains in the heads at all. If the oats had stood up all right I should have had over fifty bushels on that piece of ground. The other was spring plowed and did not do as well, yielding about fifteen bushels per acre, and being quite damp, did not get near all out of the straw in threshing.

Now, as J. F. G. says, "as to its being a swindle," in the true sense of the word, it is not. I should like to know in what sense he would have us use the word. Now, if no one is wronged, and the association lives up to its agreement, what more? As to there being an end to the concern, had you not better stop plowing and planting? because in all probability there will be an end to that sometime, and it may come before next fall too. Does anybody think or claim that a horse for which a man pays $2,000 will plow any more than one that can be bought for $75? or that a cow that a farmer pays $1,000 for will give any more milk or make any more butter than one that can be bought for fifty? Yet he would be called a swindler, I suppose, in some sense of the word.

I would not lend my assistance to any swindling scheme, and do not yet think that I have. People are apt to jump at conclusions. It is true we can not be too careful in dealing with strangers, and I am glad to see the Visitor ever ready to attack any and all dishonorable and swindling schemes. E. H.

NAVIN RECEIVES HIS SENTENCE.

The career of Thos. J. Navin, ex mayor of Adrian, as one of the heaviest forgers in the country, reached its last chapter at the supervisors' room in Dean's opera house, Monday morning at ten o'clock. The proceedings were as quietly conducted as at the preliminary examination, very few people being present except the lawyers and other officers of the court.

Sheriff Whitmore brought the prisoner into the room, when Prosecuting Attorney Salsbury remarked, "Your honor, Mr. Navin is in the court room." The complaint was at once read, the charge embodied in it being forging the Monaghan mortgage of 1880. Navin pleaded guilty, when the court held a short private conference with him.

When the judge and the prisoner returned to the court room the judge resumed his seat on the bench and Navin stood up for sentence, the prosecuting attorney asking that santence be at once passed.

The court said, "You have pleaded guilty to the offense as charged in the information. What have you to say why the sentence of the law should not be passed upon you for the offense?"

"I have nothing to say, your honor."

"In appearing here for sentence, Mr. Navin," continued the court, "you do not stand as one before the court who should be considered guilty only of the offense charged, and yet no other offense is charged against you in writing or can you be punished for any other. Still your punishment, in the eye of the law, and in view of that which I consider my duty under the law, will be such as to act not only as a punishment to yourself, but in some measure? to deter others from a like course of conduct, and to prevent it from being considered as something which young men might feel it a sort of honor, in one sense, to attempt to achieve. The necessity of punishment of such kind no one understands better than yourself. The sentence of the court is, that you be confined at hard labor in the state prison at Jackson, for a period of ten years from and including this date."

Navin stood with downcast eyes, during the trying ordeal, but there was no sign of weakness on his countenance, save one nervous movement when the court paused for a moment before pronouncing the term of sentence.—Adrian Times.

The Board of Supervisors this week will take action on organizing the new township of Clayton.

HUNTING A CURE FOR MALARIA.

AND WHAT THE INQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATIONS DEVELOPED.

Cursed with that vague and indefinite something, called malaria, and living in Lancaster, Pa., the birthplace of Mishler's Herb Bitters, Mr. Walter Kieffer, of the Daily New Era, resolved to investigate its curative powers, of which he had heard so much. He writes as follows: "Calling on Jas. H. Marshall, Esq., at present and for twelve years past, postmaster of the city, I asked, 'What do you know about Mishler's Herb Bitters?' 'I know' was the answer, 'that it is the most palpitable bitters I have ever taken, and as a tonic it has no equal.'"

That was encouraging, and the next person I met was Wm. A. Morton, Esq., of the Lancaster Intelligencer. I addressed the same inquiry to him, and quick as a flash came the answer, "I have used Mishler's Herb Bitters, off and on, for ten years, and have found it of great benefit. On one occasion, suffering from prostration, it was the only thing to give me relief."

Stepping into the office of Hon. D. P. Rosenmiller, Mayor of Lancaster, I repeated my query. "It is the best tonic I have ever known, and I regard it as an infallible cure for malaria," willingly answered his Honor.

"Mr. Steinheiser, what do you know of Mishler's Herb Bitters?" I asked, addressing Mr. J. O. Steinheiser, now United States Mail Agent, and for eight years Superintendent of the Lancaster County Hospital and Insane Asylum. "Never had a medicine in the Hospital that acted so charming—and for chronic diseases it never fails to give relief."

"Mr. Long," addressing a member of the firm of John F. Long's drug house, the oldest drug house in the State if not in America, "What has been your experience with Mishler's Herb Bitters?" "We handle a great deal of it, and the demand is constantly on the increase. I regard it as being, medicinally, the best bitters in market. People who buy it once invariably call for it again."

The next place visited was John R. Kauffman's drug store. "How's the Mishler's Herb Bitters market, Mr. Kauffman?" "It never was better. We sell a great deal of it in the city, but the bulk of our trade is from the rural districts—among old farmers who need a tonic, and among these living in malarial regions. One old gentleman from the country has been coming for eight years, and as we know about how long a bottle will last him we know just when to expect him. It is a great bitters."

H. B. Cochran, another prominent druggist, was the next person approached. "What has been your experience with Mishler's Herb Bitters, Mr. Cochran?" "For steady sale it has no equal. It is chemically pure and medicinally strong. Lately the demand for the Red Label brand—that intended particularly for ladies—has greatly increased, and I know of nothing more popular or more effective for the weaknesses peculiar to the female sex."

Meeting Rev. J. G. Fritchie, an octogenarian minister of the gospel on the street, I engaged him in conversation, and remarking on his great age and seeming good health, he said, to my surprise, "I owe it all to Mishler's Herb Bitters; it is the best friend I have, sustaining me in all moments of physical weakness, and if any one desires my testimony your are at liberty to give them my name. Let them address me, and I'll tell them all about it."

But why multiply this home testimony? Address whom I might—preachers, lawyers, bankers, druggists, merchants—all who had any knowledge of the bitters, and the testimony was overwhelmingly in its favor. Suffice to say that, although a skeptic on the subject of curing malaria, I became convinced that there was one preparation, and one only, that would cure it, and its name is Mishler's Herb Bitters.

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kas., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by C. A. Wright & Co.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

Some physicians assert that a hearty meal at midday is injurious to the health. A five or six o'clock dinner, eaten slowly with the members of his own family, is far healthier. A heavy midday meal unfits professional men for carrying on any business in the afternoon, as it makes them heavy and sleepy, for nature requires some kind of repose to aid digestion. Our popular system of eating is wrong. The majority of persons thrust three heavy meals into about ten hours, and leave the body without a fresh supply of food for the remaining fourteen hours of the day and night. Two good meals, morning and evening, would be the proper plan, with perhaps a light lunch or cracker at about one o'clock in the day. This would allow both of the heavy meals an opportunity to digest before the next was taken. As to a heavy midday meal for men who have to tear around as if the next moment were to be their last, it is perfectly ridiculous, as the food, instead of digesting and forming blood, muscle and brain, acts as a block to those forces of nature—choking up a sewer, as it were. It is best to eat lightly in the middle of the day.

Have you a cough? Sleepless nights need no longer trouble you. The use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, before retiring, will soothe the cough to quiet, allay the inflamation, and allow the needed repose. It will, moreover, speedily heal the pulmonary organs, and give you health.

The Bible has been translated into Zulu language.

C. A. Wright & Co. wish to make an assertion, which they can back with a positive guarantee. It is all about Acker's Blood Elixir. They claim for it superior merits over all other remedies of its kind, and guarantee for it a positive and sure cure for Rheumatism, Syphillis, and all blood disorders. It frees the skin from spots and disease, and leaves the complexion clear. Ask them about it.

There are more than 600 varieties of the chrysanthenum, the national flower of Japan.

A bowl of good pea soup is as satisfying as a hearty dinner on a cold day. To make a gallon of it, wash a pint of peas and soak them over night; then boil in five pints of water, gently simmering three hours or so, until thoroughly soft. With a potato-masher rub the soup through a colander or wire sieve. A pound of beef or ham bone may be boiled with the peas. The soup may be seasoned in various ways—with onions, cloves, pepper, etc.

Decided steps ought to be taken to cure a cold or cough at once. We should recommend Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. This valuable medicine is indorsed by physicians and you can rely on its doing the work every time.

An English writer says that the middle class Englishman, as a rule, does not buy books, except a few classics and professional treatises, but waits for his chance at the book club or circulating library. There are instances where authors are asked to lend their own copies by men of ten times their income. Wine and china may be bought, but books must be hired, for, says the writer, the English are educated to the point of reading, but not to paying for books.

Your system is now more susceptible to the benefits of a reliable medicine than at any other season. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Candles of wax furnished by insects specially reared for the purpose provide the most brilliant light known in China.

C. A. Wright & Co. would specially recommend to the ladies Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets. As a laxative they have no equal. They are guaranteed to cure Chronic Constipation, Dyspepsia, and all diseases arising from a deranged stomach. With a free use of the Tablets, Sick Headache is impossible.

Gov. Hoadley of Ohio, in detailing some of the woes of a governor without a pardon board, relates that he was personally solicited for pardon by a prisoner in confinement for manslaughter on the ground that he was a Democrat, while the same prisoner sought pardon from Gov. The Washington correspondent of the Detroit Evening News has the following to say of our able congressman.

Col. Eldredge is a hard worker and very popular. He is a good story teller and has a fund of interesting anecdotes at his command. When the colonel retires to the cloak room, or to one of the sofas for a rest, he is generally followed by half a dozen members anxious to hear him talk. Most everything reminds Eldredge of a story, and in this respect he may be said to resemble Lincoln.

Tom Navin is nothing if not sensational. He is a bundle of surprises. Last Monday morning he marched into the Circuit Court under Sheriff Whitmore's escort pleaded guilty to the charge against him and received a sentence of ten years to Jackson. Tom has probably weighed the chances carefully, and deemed it prudent to make the best of a bad job. With all his faults Tom possessed a generous hand and a kind heart. He had the legal and political ability to have become one of the leaders of Michigan during the next twenty years, had his talents been directed in a proper channel. "Making haste to get rich" has ruined many a promising young man. After all, the old fashioned honest method is the best. Riches that come slowly and honestly leave no sting behind.

Without the services of European officers that prophet could never have hoped to achieve the success that has attended his efforts and Pain can therefore boast of being the prime favorite in the defeat of the English in the Soudan. Osman Digma, the fellow officer of Pain, who is, as before mentioned, also a Frenchman, is somewhat older than the former, being fifty-three years of age, while Pain is about forty. ANALYZING THE BAKING POWDERS.

Under the direction of the New York state board of health, eighty-four different kinds of baking powders, embracing all the brands that could be found in the state were submitted to examination and analysis by Prof. C. F. Chandler, a member of the state board, and President of the New York City board of health, assisted by Prof. Edward G. Love, the well-known late United States government chemist. The official report shows that a large number of the powders examined were found to contain alum or lime, many of them to such an extent as to make them so much objectionable for use in the preparation of human food.

Alum was found in twenty-nine samples. This drug is employed in baking powders to cheapen their cost. The presence of lime is attributed to the impure cream of tartar of commerce used in their manufacture. Such cream of tartar was also analyzed and found to contain lime and other impurities, in some samples to the extent of 8 per cent of their whole weight.

All the baking powders of the market, with the single exception of "Royal," not including the alum and phosphate powders, which were long since discarded as unsafe or unfit for its prudent housekeepers, are made from the impure cream of tartar of commerce, and consequently contain lime to a corresponding extent.

The only baking powder yet found by chemical analysis to be entirely free from lime and absolutely pure is the "Royal." This perfect purity results from the exclusive use of cream of tartar specially refined and prepared by patent processes of the N. Y. Tartar Co., which totally removes the tartrate of lime and other impurities. The cost of this chemically pure cream of tartar is much greater than any other, and on account of this greater cost is used by no baking powder except the "Royal."

Prof. Love, who made the analysis of baking powders for the New York state board of health, as well as for the government, says of the purity and wholesomeness of the "Royal":

"I have tested a package of "Royal" Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain alum or phosphates or any injurious substances."

D. G. LOVE, Ph.D.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for April will certainly please many different classes of readers. The lovers of the water will turn at once to the opening article, "Yachts and Yachting in America," by W. P. Stephens, with its illustrations of famous yachts. The student of history will be pleased with Mr. Guernsey's "Friedrich Wilhelm I., Second King of Prussia," and the article on "Emma, Lady Hamilton," both of which are finely illustrated. The story element is well sustained. Garret Walker's thrilling serial, "The Death mark," reaches its twenty-ninth chapter, and there are several short stories of merit, besides some beautiful poems. The miscellany is, as usual, well up to the mark, and the frontispiece illustration in colors, "Carmen," a thing of beauty. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY.

A gentleman, whose relations with the President are very close, and who appears to know something regarding the policy of the President, tells the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Herald something regarding that policy that may prove interesting to place hunters, though they will hardly be pleased with it. Inasmuch as it coincides with the policy thus far pursued at the White House, the statement of the gentleman is entitled to consideration, not that it would not otherwise have. He says:

"I am not surprised that the Administration is not faster. I took care two weeks ago that the President would go slow very slow, and he has come likewise to think that position. When I was there at the President's request, I knew what it was for. The politicians and place hunters are eager for many changes, [illegible] They have spoken the language of disappointment with the reflection that the next day they will surely bring [illegible] of disappointment. But the morrow has invariably brought them more disappointment. They scratch their heads and wonder why the delay and speculate on the date when the big list of nominations will go pouring into the Senate. But I tell you they will continue to be disappointed and go on expecting. There are to be no big lists. This is not the preparatory stage. The administration is not getting ready for a sweep. The nominations will come along one or two or three at a time. The President takes the ground that even such changes as are within his power should be made slowly; that full inquiry and reflection must be had upon every appointment. The office seekers may as well go home. They can do themselves no good by remaining here. There are a few more changes to be made here in the bureau officers, but they will come slowly—three or four a week. While I do not wish to be understood as speaking for the President—I have no right to do that—I feel as sure as a man can of anything that during the first year of his Presidency Mr. Cleveland will send no more nominations to the Senate than Mr. Arthur sent during his last year. I doubt if he sends as many. The Civil Service Reform law will be faithfully and earnestly upheld and the tenure of the office law will be rigidly respected. Each Cabinet Minister will of course, be given authority over his own department, but when he desires to make a removal for cause, that cause must be shown to the President. The cause will have to be a good one. Because the incumbent is a Republican will not answer. But if he be careless in the conduct of his office, if he fails to cooperate with the bureau to the satisfaction of his chief in securing good service, or if his offensive partisanship has led him so far as to violate the Civil Service law, he will have to go. But this work, like the rest, will be done decently and in order. Every case will be given careful attention. The evidence offered will be thoroughly inspected, and the incumbent will have a chance to be heard in his own defence.

"Men of bad character, demagogues, professional politicians and bummers should save themselves the trouble of working for office. They have small chances. One important appointment has already been made, which the President regrets, but even Cleveland can not free himself entirely from campaign obligations. Once in a while an unworthy man may slip in, but there will be a smaller per cent of this kind, I predict, than ever before in the history of the country. Democrats who are angry at the President, on account of his slow movements, should pause and reflect. They may not know it, but some of us knew it all the while that he could have had a quarrel with the Senate on the slightest provocation. The Republican Senators discussed that whole matter, and the truth is they have been hoping for some pretext upon which to base an objection.—They would like, or at least a few leading spirits, with ambition or partisan purposes to satisfy, would like to precipitate a rupture. The President does not mean to have one if it can be avoided by fairness, caution and respect for all laws upon the statute books.

"Mr. Cleveland is a Democrat, and will be a democratic president. But it is his ambition to take advantage of the growing popular sentiment against violent partisanism, and so conduct the Government that our political methods will undergo a change for the better during his administration. He wants to see party ties less enslaving; he wants to see an end of the spoils system; he wants to see an end of campaign bitterness and election dispute dangers. He thinks the time is ripe for an uplifting of both parties and for bringing American politics to a higher plane. This is his ambition, and success is crowning his efforts. I am a business man. Since Cleveland was elected I have been in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Richmond and Atlanta. I meet business men. Everywhere there is a better feeling.—The best men in the country are responsive to the President's endeavor. Never before did I know so good a feeling regarding the Government in commercial circles as there is at this time. We are a nation of business men, and this business administration will be popular. There will be a strong public sentiment which will override the dissatisfied spoilsmen and make them silent. I am sure of it. If I were to say in a word what I think Cleveland's ambition is—and I have talked with him in great frankness on both sides—I should say he wants a good, clean Government that will so endear itself to the country that the next Administration, no matter through which party, will have to follow in its footsteps. It is his highest hope that he may be so firm and so strong and successful that his own party may continue in power, but if it does not, and the Republicans come in again, they will not dare to return to the spoils system and make a sweep of the patronage without just cause for removal and with proper regard for the good of the public service. The President is going slow because he is not building for his four years alone—he is building, he hopes, for all time."

The sun has crossed the line.

Stop Spearing Fish.

It would be well for those engaged in spearing fish through the ice in our lakes to read the law on the subject. Several complaints have already been made to us in regard to the matter, and some one is liable to get into trouble if the practice continued. The law says that "it shall not be lawful hereafter, at any time to fish with spears, point nets, trapnets, or any species of gillnets, or during the months of March or April by spearing or shooting in any of the waters of the State of Michigan except in Michigan, Superior, Huron, St. Mary's, the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers, and Lake Erie and the harbors connected with said lakes. Any person offending against the provisions of this act shall, for every offence, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not over sixty days, to be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Blissfield Advance: Frank S. Porter, of Ogden, went to bed at the Lewis House, Battle Creek, last Thursday night and blew out the gas. He was not found until three o'clock Friday afternoon, when the door of the room was burst open. He was insensible, and two doctors worked over him for several hours and succeeded in placing him out of danger. Queer that in this day and age there are still people who will persist in blowing out the gas.

RINK RACKET.

The senior and junior polo clubs played five practice games at the Tecumseh rink last Monday night. The seniors won three out of the five.

The opening of the Opera House rink last Friday night was a success in every particular. As early as seven o'clock the crowd began to arrive and by eight the floor was crowded with skaters and the gallery filled with spectators. Knapp's band was present and rendered some of their best music. At nine o'clock the floor was cleared for the grand march, and W. T. Eccles and Miss Hannah Heesen led one of the best marches we have seen this winter. The floor, being new, was not quite so easy to skate on as it will be later, but everyone seemed to be well pleased with the rink and it will probably receive its share of the public patronage. At ten o'clock skates were removed and dancing was continued till midnight.

Miss Kittie Heeley, of Kalamazoo, was at the opening of the Opera House rink last Friday evening. She is visiting Mrs. W. D. Admam, during her stay in Tecumseh.

The Opera House rink will hold its sessions Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings.

Owing to a mistake in the management, the Opera House rink was not warmed last Monday evening, but those who wished to skate in the cold were invited to do so free of charge. A good many accepted the invitation.

It is said that in some parts of the county onion socials are all the rage, and this is how it is worked: Six ladies take an onion with them into a room, and one of them takes a bite of it. Then a young gentleman is admitted to the game, and if, after kissing all of them, he fails to tell which of them bit the onion, why, then all the girls would kiss him.

M. E. Conklin is making all necessary preparations for the spring campaign in his business. He will handle again this year the celebrated Walter A. Wood mowing, harvesting and reaping machines, and will endeavor to eclipse his record of sales over any former year in which he has engaged in the business. Met. will make things hum this spring and summer, or we are mistaken.

The "Bee" under date of Dec. 3 '84 says: The Alhambra Club with banjo's and guitars there rendered a very fine selection which called forth much applause and they were compelled to respond. Barney and Burgert sang as a solo and duett with banjo and guitar accompaniment "The Cuckoo song," a charming bit of melody, which drew forth such applause that the gentlemen were forced to respond.

Street Commissioner Jordan started an excavation on the corner near Mrs. Tilton's last Monday to ascertain where the water pipes were frozen and thaw them out. Upon reaching the pipes, a big leak was discovered, which has probably been running for some time. There is apparently plenty of water in the mains, but no water could be drawn from the hydrants below the leak. The cause of the trouble on the night of the last fire was thus disclosed.

The two progressive euchre clubs of our village are in a flourishing condition and hold their meetings regularly one evening each week. Below are the members of each club, the names opposite each other being partners.

The Marshall Statesmen says: It is now well nigh certain that the Michigan & Ohio railway will have a western outlet on the shore of Lake Michigan this spring and those who are in the councils of the company say that Muskegon is the harbor chosen. It is, they say, rarely blockaded by ice, and on this account is much more valuable as a port than Grand Haven, where it was first thought the road would be built. It is stated that already arrangements have been made with the C. & W. M. railroad for the use of sixty miles of its track, from Grand Rapids to Muskegon, and operations will soon commence. It is an indication of energy and life on the part of the M. & O. management which has long been looked for. When the line of steamers from Muskegon to Milwaukee is put on, this road will get its full share of the north-western carrying trade.

The Lenawee County teacher's association will meet at Dean's Opera House, Adrian, on Saturday March 28th.

Eldridge Hyde is now serving as private detective for the Lake Shore road in Sheriff Whitmore's old position.

The Lenawee Co., Fair will be held at Adrian on Sept. 23d to 25th. M. Graves, Sec'y. P. O. address, Lenawee Junction.

Auctions are plenty these days. And this leads us to remark that the best place to get Auction bills printed is at the HERALD office.

Col. Eldredge has established an office with Schlieman & Helme, in Adrian, being the rooms where Judge Stacy's office formerly was.

This has been a very severe winter on bees. It is thought that not more than one-half the colonies alive last fall will come out alive this spring.

The winter term of the public schools closes to-morrow. There will be a vacation of one week and the spring term will begin on Monday April 6th.

The public school examinations are in progress to-day and will continue through to-morrow. There was a large attendance of visitors at the central building this forenoon.

The Blade under date of Feb. 13, '85 says: The Alhambra Club gave a waltz that made many feet involuntarily beat time. And all their tunes had their usual welcomes and encores.

Mrs. Chas. Blanchard of Chicago arrived in town last Thursday evening and will remain about a week among her Tecumseh and Franklin friends. She likes her home in Chicago very much.

The Detroit News is of the opinion that roller skating will sometime be the universal means of locomotion and that skating tracks will or should be laid over the country, it being a cheaper easier and quicker way of traveling than by steam or horse cars, bicycles, etc.

Alex. Traudt has sold the Exchange Hotel property to C. A. Groff of West Virginia, and the new landlord took possession yesterday. Mr. Groff is a gentlemanly appearing man and evidently knows how to keep a hotel. He will doubtless receive his share of the traveling public. Mr. Traudt goes back to Adrian.

The unsolicited names of new subscribers to the HERALD which are being added to our list almost every day, show that the citizens of Tecumseh and vicinity appreciate our efforts to make a good, clean, reliable family newspaper. We are not too old to feel gratified by these marks of appreciation, and our patrons may rest assured that we shall give them the best there is in the shop.

Surgeons of the International Throat and Lung Infirmary, Detroit, Mich., will make their next regular monthly visit at the Lilley House, Tecumseh, Saturday, Sunday and Monday; April 4, 5, and 6th, 1885. Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases treated EXCLUSIVELY. Come early and avoid the rush which invariably fills our parlors in the afternoon. See adertisement in another column. Come and have your lungs examined free.

Adrian Times—Col. J. W. Romeyn, of Detroit, has a copy of the "Western almanac and Michigan register" for the year 1826. It has recently been overhauled by the Detroit Free Press, and many interesting pieces of quaint state history gleaned therefrom.—There were in that year only seventeen postmasters in the state, and only one of them was in this county, Musgrove Evans, at Tecumseh. Col. Eldridge, while looking over his daily half bushel of applications for postoffices, may derive some remote comfort from this item.

It is believed by shrewd observers that prices generally are as low as they will be and that there is scarcely any kind of merchandise or securities which is not a safe purchase in reasonable amounts to-day. An illustration of this is furnished in the case of wool, which, having fallen last summer to the lowest price in forty years, obstinately refuses to decline any further, and has been unchanged by a slack demand for six months past. Very similar illustrations are afforded by flour, grain, print cloths and other articles.

Among the April Magazines the Cottage Hearth is especially attractive, as it contains, besides its usual amount of short Stories, Poems and domestic matter, an interesting paper on Westminster Abby and the Tower of London, by Willis Boyd Allen. The article is finely illustrated and gives, in the form of an easy narrative, a full description of the venerable buildings recently attacked by the "Dynamiters" in London. Among the other contributors to this number are E. Vinton Blake, Abby Morton Diaz, Mary A. P. Stansbury, Horace Lunt, and William H. Hayne. We notice that the publishers have increased the number of pages by the addition of a new department, devoted to correspondence about home gardening and general floriculture.

The portraits of distinguished persons which are appearing in the HERALD, should be cut out and preserved in a scrap book. They are not cheap wood cuts, but first class electrotypes and can be relied upon as correct likenesses.

The Excelsior pearl button works, started at Adrian about two years ago, will be removed to East Saginaw. The material inducements offered by the citizens there to properly develop the business is the assigned reason for the removal.

Adrian Press: It must be very flattering to the editor of a newspaper to receive flattering notices of its worth and commendations of those articles that appear in the patent "innards" of the concern. Yet a Lenawee county paper publishes a letter of this kind with evident pride.

Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House St., Boston, will send free, to all who will send their address on a postal card, an engraving of this famous Monument, the tallest structure in the world; also valuable historical facts connected therewith. The Toledo Blade of March 21st says: Mrs. Elizabeth Mansfield Irving and the Alhambra club of this city, will go to Tecumseh, Mich., on Monday, March 30, to appear at an entertainment for the benefit of the Tecumseh Library association. The people of the town named may depend on having a great treat listening to those Toledoans. Of Mrs. Irving it is almost unnecessary to speak as her wonderful elocutionary gifts have secured to her a national reputation. The Alhambra club is composed of gentlemen of fine musical talents, and the music they discourse upon banjos and guitars is of the most charming kind.

LONGFELLOW'S MEMORIAL.

Appropriate School Exercises in Commemoration of the Great American Poet.

Henry W. Longfellow is justly regarded as one of the greatest of American poets. When, on the 24th of March, 1882, the wires flashed the news of his death over the land, many a heart was bowed down, and many an admirer of his poems felt that they had lost a personal friend.

Prof. Hammond conceived the happy idea that a program of memorial exercises in the school would not only be interesting, but would serve to familiarize the pupils with the works and the worth of this typical American poet. The exercises were held last Tuesday afternoon in the Central building.

The 8th, 7th and 6th grades, presided over by Mr. Fred Hendershot and Misses Emma O. Skinner and Grace Willett, assembled in the East room, second floor, which was well filled with pupils and spectators. The blackboards were ornamented with crayon drawings, which were finely executed and displayed much artistic talent. The portrait of Longfellow framed, was drawn by Vernie Heesen, Longfellow's residence by Frank Swick, the old home by Lelma Stewart.

The program was announced by Mr. Hendershot, and was presented in the following order. The pupils who had parts assigned them seemed to catch the spirit of the occasion, and all did finely. The large number of spectators present were well entertained.

The A. and B. divisions of the High School, presided over by Misses Lillian M. Berkey and Julia A. Condict united in one program, which was given in the upper East room. The blackboards of this room were also handsomely decked out with crayon drawings. In the center of the large board was a beautiful portrait of Longfellow executed by Walter Heck; his residence was drawn by Fred Hillman, the arrow in the tree by Mabel Hayden; the representations of the old mill by Lyster Dewey, and "The Rainy Day" by Myrtie Clark.

On each side of the portrait appeared in neat typographical lettering one of these verses written by Longfellow

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky
Shine on our mortal sight.

So, when a great man dies
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

Much time must have been bestowed upon these crayon sketches, as they were all very complete.

The program was announced by Miss Berkey in the following order—

BANJO CONCERT AND ELOCUTION.

The celebrated Alhambra Banjo Club and Elizabeth Mansfield Irving, Toledo's noted elocutionist, will give the fifth entertainment of the Library course on Monday evening, March 30.

Mrs. Irving's style of delivery is admirable, her gestures grand, and her voice penetrating and distinct.—Toledo Commercial.

Mrs. Irving is an excellent reader, with a full, resonant voice that reaches every corner. Good facial expression and dramatic ability, which she uses with nice discimination.—Jackson Patriot.

Mrs. Irving was received by the audience with cheering, the waving of hats and a storm of applause, as the gallant boys rose to their feet. The lady recited the "Drummer Boy of Mission Ridge" in a most eloquent and impressive manner and was rewarded with the most uproarious applause. Mrs. Irving was recalled and by special request recited "Sheridan's Ride."—Cincinnati Gazette.

Mrs. Irving's readings and recitations must be seen and heard to be understood. Mrs. Irving, in her original and characteristic method, has done much to elevate the "recitation" from where she found it, and invest it with that peculiar charm which surrounds the higher forms of the dramatic art. While she may be said to be creating a new school of her own in elocutionary and graphic effects, yet it is scholarly and conservative rather than merly sensational or extravigant. While she is aided in this by a full and rich voice, she does not depend upon them alone, but aims by careful study, to become thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the situation.—Toledo Blade.

TREES AND TREE PEDDLERS.

How, When, and of Whom to Purchase the Fruit Bearers.

From the number of letters received of late from our readers making inquiries about nursery stock and nurserymen, we conclude that the tree peddler is abroad and actively engaged in seeking customers. We have frequently taken occasion to refer to those itinerants known as tree agents or tree peddlers in no very complimentary terms. Although we admit that they do distribute a large amount of nursery stock, and no doubt have been influential in increasing the horticultural products of the country. It must also be admitted that there are many persons who will purchase trees and other kinds of plants if personally solicited to do so, who would never think of sending a nursery or seeking among the seed catalogues for such articles. From this point of view, the tree agent may be considered a rather useful member of society. In fact, as often as we have warned our readers against dealing with this class of peddlers, we still have great respect for the upright agent. But this commendation stops upon the threshold, and there is so little of this among the tribe that a certain kind of suspicion is cast over the entire fraternity. Occasionally we hear of a farmer or fruit grower who has dealt with peddlers for years and is perfectly satisfied with his bargains, but such instances may be cited as the rare exceptions to the general rule.

In the first place, the tree agent is held in a responsible manner, with [illegible] given agent, nowhere he can be found, if there are errors to be corrected, for instead of this he is one of those roving errant beings who come and go, [illegible] law [illegible] man [illegible] his own will and [illegible] responsible. Then, again, these peddlers usually ignore all [illegible] sale, and especially those who [illegible] low prices of staple articles. They make up for doubling all [illegible] for what they have to sell, without the least regard to supply and demand. The more ignorant their customers the higher the price they charge for the article offered for sale.

It may be said in defense of the agent that the purchaser should know the kind of the market [illegible] which he proposes to buy, and, while in a general way this may be admitted, it can not be expected that the average farmer is a seedsman or even a horticultural nurserymen. It is a weakness of human nature to desire something new and a little different from anything possessed by our neighbors, and when an glib-tongued tree agent expatiates upon the superior qualities of the great Moscow Apple from Siberia, the would-be purchaser is inclined to think that it must be a better variety than the common yellow Sweet or Russian apple, or it would not have such a remarkable name. We have often thought it very strange that so many persons could be made to believe that these nursery agents had in their possession varieties of fruit not named in any of the great nurserymen's catalogues. But it is a fact, and thousands of dollars are paid annually to peddlers of plants and trees for varieties that do not exist except in the imagination of those who pretend to have them for sale.

When an agent or even a nurseryman pretends to have better stock or varieties than can be obtained elsewhere, it is safe to be a little suspicious of him, for it seldom happens that any one man is able to raise better plants than any of his competitors, or even could sell the entire stock of any variety for more than a year or two at furthest. We do not mean to be understood as saying that all nurserymen are equally favorably situated for producing all kinds of trees or other plants, for this is far from being true, because soils and climates differ as much as the skill of the propagators of plants. One nurseryman may be favored with a soil and climate especially adapted to the production of pears, apples, cherries and similar trees, while another may be in a favorable situation for the raising of peach trees, figs, oranges, lemons or various species and varieties of conifers, that do not thrive on the heavy soils that are especially adapted to pear and apple trees.

But all these peculiarities and advantages of different soils and climates are well known to our leading nurserymen, and when necessary they make exchanges among themselves in order to have a full and complete stock of all the principal nursery products likely to be called for by their customers. By keeping this fact in view our readers can readily see why it is that the prices named in the catalogues of our great commercial nurseries are quite uniform, and why they are not kept a secret from any person who will take the trouble to inquire about them, or even send for a price list. It is true that the prices of nursery stock do not fluctuate like those of ordinary farm products, because the nurserymen fix their own prices and are usually able to sustain them, whether purchasers are plentiful or otherwise. If they can not sell their plants at a profit they dig them up and burn them, returning the ashes to the soil as a fertilizer, which is a better policy than to sell them at a loss.—N. Y. Sun.

No Danger.

Mr. Minks—"My dear, you should not put coins in your mouth, for diseases are often caught in that way. I noticed yesterday that while you were looking through your pocketbook for small change to give the street-car conductor you placed a quarter between your lips and held it there."

Mrs. Minks—"Well, suppose I did; where's the harm?"

"You should read the papers, Mrs. Minks. Scientists have discovered bacteria on silver coins. Do you know what terrible things bacteria are?"

"Not exactly, no."

"Why, they are little animals which get into the human system and cause all sorts of diseases."

"Is that all? Well, then I am in no danger from the money you give me."

"And why not, pray?"

"You always squeeze a quarter hard enough to crush all animal life out of it before you part with it."—Philadelphia Call.

SPRING DRESSES.

Materials and Trimmings, and How They are Fashioned.

Cashmere of the finest twills will be used for both house and street dresses in the early spring months, and for cool days in summer. All the light shades of reseda, ashes-of-roses, olive, and brown are largely imported, and are to be employed for the entire dress when it is made tailor fashion, but there are velvets of similar shades to be combined with it for more elaborate costumes. Gilt braiding, not merely in parallel lines, but in embroidery designs of vines for borders, or separate figures, stars, blocks or crescents, will be the trimmings when only cashmere is used. When velvet is employed there will be fine cords and piping folds edging various parts of the corsage, while folds or bands of velvet will trim the skirt. Those who object to velvet as heavy for summer dresses will have the accessories of watered silk or of gros grain of the same shade. Black cashmere with close silk embroidery upon it in interlinked rings, leaves, [illegible] or small flowers will form the overdress for skirts of gros grain or moire silks, and for quite young ladies the gilt or silver wrought cashmeres will be employed. A pretty model for these has all the visible front part of the skirt covered with two very deep flounces of gathered gros grain cut out on the lower edges to form leaves that curve toward one side. Above the falls two irregular draperies of cashmere with interlinked rings embroidered all over it; the drapery on the left side curves much deeper than that on the right side, and each is carried up to the waist on the sides to meet a long breadth of cashmere that covers the entire back of the skirt. The back may hang in very full pleats quite straight from belt to feet, but for those who need a more buoyant tournure it is caught up in a single bunch of pleats on each side and in the middle quite near the top, and hence falls plainly. Shirring will be used on the front of the basque of such a dress, and may be done in the cashmere itself, or, which is a better plan, in two small scarfs set on down the front, and made of the silk used in the skirt. Otherwise the basque is very plainly fashioned, and may have a slight position pleating, or else be smooth over the tournure; it is necessary, however, that it be quite short on the sides and behind in order to be in good style.

When watered silk is used, it is more effective as a plastron put on quite plainly in a curve extending to the top of the darts in front, and about the same depth behind. For young ladies there are laced girdle fronts made of moire or of velvet from six to eight inches deep, set in the front darts, and laced with gilt cord or a silk lacing string over a soft shirred corsage of the wool or of silk. Another youthful fancy has slits cut in the edges of the basque over the hips, and these slits are laced together with a cord and tassel of gilt, silver or of silk. Sometimes folds of velvet in which gilt or silver braid is tied along the edges trim the front of the waist and the skirt. Pointed revers of velvet or of gros grain or moire will be arranged in various ways on cashmere and on Bengaline silks. The single revers all on one side of the corsage front is newer than that placed on each side, and promises to be used especially when the opposite side is richly braided. For slight figures it is a good plan to make a very narrow and flat vest of velvet or silk with a standing collar to match, and outside of the vest add a shirred scarf of the wool of the dress waist. Sometimes this fullness is made of the front part of the waist itself pushed back on the lining. The cut-away basques will also be made again, sloping back toward the sides from the top of the first dart. The space inside may be covered plainly as a vest, or it may have a shirred bib-like piece in one with the front of the overskirt, in the fashion worn last year. Side draperies falling in waved jabot folds on the skirt are to be lined with velvet or silk that will come into sight in each layer of the folds.

Instead of severely plain bands or folds for trimming skirts there will now be vandykes, scallops or leaf points on the upper edge, while other folds will have openings or slits cut at regular intervals, and through these will be drawn gilt or silver braid. Tucks will be more used than at any previous season, and these will also be decorated with braid, or with stitching, &c with very narrow piping on the lower edge.

The Eton jacket is a fanciful little garment that will be becoming to slight figures. It is similar to the Zouave jacket, but instead of being curved open in front, it slopes away gradually from the throat to the line of the waist, and is slightly pointed behind. The new caprice is to edge it with closely strung small gilt buttons, or else with large cut jet beads. A soft sash is passed around the waist with this jacket, and sashes generally are to be used with spring dresses.—Harper's Bazar.

Cheap But Valuable Advice.

It is not easy for American women to resist the influence of pretty things, and the only way is not to pay much attention to mere novelties of dress and fashion, but adhere to certain fixed and well defined rules. By good materials, avoid cheap trimmings, select always such colors as will go well together, and usually have them dark. Never wear your best on a secondary occasion, or when it is likely to be subject to severe wear and tear. Have best dresses cut or made by a best dress maker, and employ your own efforts on your house dresses and washable materials. Use best black kid gloves, ecru or beige tints. They wear better than fancy colors, and the black are better made and can be worn with all dresses. Never buy cheap gloves or cheap hosiery—they are a delusion and a snare. Always have a plain black walking dress and handsome black dress, and depend upon cut and material more than upon ornamentation. If you can embroider yourself a dress, you can make a thing of beauty with but little cost; but otherwise content yourself with the neatness that is the best evidence of refined taste.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Spring Medicine

When the weather grows warmer, that extreme tired feeling, want of appetite, dullness, languor, and lassitude, afflict almost the entire human family, and scrofula and other diseases caused by humors, manifest themselves with many. It is impossible to throw off this debility and expel humors from the blood without the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I could not sleep, and would get up in the morning with hardly life enough to get out of bed. I had no appetite, and my face would break out with pimples. I bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling, and my appetite improved." R. A. SANFORD, Kent, O.

"I had been much troubled by general debility. Last spring Hood's Sarsaparilla proved just the thing needed. I derived an immense amount of benefit. I never felt better." H. P. MILLET, Boston, Mass.

At no other season is the system so susceptible to the beneficial effects of a reliable tonic and invigorant. The impure state of the blood, the deranged digestion, and the weak condition of the body, caused by its long battle with the cold, wintry blasts, all call for the reviving, regulating and restoring influences so happily and effectively combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla did me a great deal of good. I had no particular disease, but was tired out from overwork, and it toned me up." MRS. G. K. SIMMONS, Cohoes, N. Y.

"For seven years, spring and fall, I had scrofulous sores come out on my legs, and for two years was not free from them at all. I suffered very much. Last May I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken two bottles, the sores healed and the humor left me." C. A. ARNOLD, Arnold, Me.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub, or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain: it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

HOUSEKEEPING.

Some Good Advice By a Woman to Her Housekeeping Sisters.

Successful housekeeping! How many of us fully realize the meaning of that term? As I take it, successful housekeeping does not consist merely in keeping the house scrupulously clean from garret to cellar, and the table always supplied with the choicest food; but in doing our work in the easiest and pleasantest manner to ourselves, and in that way which makes those about us in every way most comfortable. And to do this requires judgment, patience and much careful study and forethought. We have been deluged with advice about having a time, a plan and a place for everything; but all ye who have tried it know how utterly impossible it is to keep our resolutions regarding the last two, especially where there are young children, or frequent callers to break in upon the routine; but I have found it a great saving of time and strength to plan by littles. While ironing, sitting to pare potatoes or apples, nursing baby, etc., I keep thinking what I shall do next, planning every step, then if any mistakes occur they are only mental ones: for instance, if a trip to the cellar is soon to be made I endeavor to think of everything that is to be taken, and everything that can be brought at that time, instead of running with or after one thing at a time in the hurried moment in which it happens to be thought of.

Try it, ladies, you have no idea what a help it is until you do try planning what you will do next, and just how in every particular; it is so much easier to revise it and correct it in our minds than with our feet. If you are forgetful, it is convenient to have a slate hanging in the kitchen on which you can note down many of the important little things which might otherwise not be thought of when it would be easiest to do them. On the other side of the slate you might keep a record of the names and dates of papers in which you saw recipes you wish to try, or any valuable hints: for one often sees such, and when we take many papers it is difficult to find what one wants without some clew: when full, copy into a little memorandum book, unless you have tried enough (and placed in your tested receipt book which every housekeeper should make for herself), to erase and make room for more. Speaking of planning, I presume none of you retire at night without seeing breakfast all on a line in your mental vision, it saves so much hurry and worry in the morning—ah! this worry, it is the bane of American women. Let us strive to always remember

"'Tis worry, not work, that kills."

Another one of the greatest aids in avoiding bustle and confusion is to begin in time. It is certainly much better to do a thing in season than out of season, and if it must be done why not do it—in time? Form this habit and it will soon become a sort of second nature to be punctual.

I have found it easiest as soon as breakfast work is done and house in order (one room at least so you will not be embarrassed if a neighbor steps in), to arrange for dinner all that can be gotten ready at that time; it is so much pleasanter to have it off one's mind at once than to wonder all through the forenoon, "What shall I get for dinner?" And, when possible, I set the table at any leisure time, putting on salt, spoons, castor, everything that will not dry out or spoil from getting too warm or too cool, and that will not attract flies, though, I hope, many are using screens, they cost but little and, though they do not afford complete relief from the pests, they are a wonderful advantage. Another help, where the household is so fortunate as to have a baby in it, is to arrange its nap with reference to the dinner hour, if possible, having him asleep at that time; with a little care to form the habit a healthy babe can generally be put to sleep an hour before dinner and sleep till it is all over. Mine does—sometimes.

On ironing day I have adopted the plan suggested by a writer in a late paper, always to iron the finest, most tedious clothes first, for two very good reasons: first, we are fresh and have more strength and patience for them than when weary at the last, and, second, if we are hindered in any way so that anything must be hurried over, or shook out and left till another time, it will only be the coarse articles, which will not be hurt so much by such treatment. As to what pieces need ironing each one must be her own judge. I used to think that every article must be smooth and nice before putting away, and they do look nicer, but with my little ones around me now, with minds and bodies to be cared for as well as clothing, I find sheets wash-rags, flannels and coarse underwear can go without sometimes for the sake of having the time thus gained to make a child happy, read a new paper or book, arrange some little surprise for "papa," or at least have time to compose myself and be calm and pleasant when he comes. I know we can not always do this, but let's do so whenever we can, remembering the faces are very much like mirrors, giving us back a reflection of our own; but I want to say just here that when leaving things undone, or slightly done, let it not be anything that will endanger health. Everything in and about the house should always be so clean and fresh and pure as to incur no risk in that direction.

As to a place for everything, have it so if you can: where closets and cupboards are scarce this is difficult, and if out-of-the-way places are chosen some of the careless ones will not always put them there, so we think it best to have boxes, pockets, hooks and closet-door catch-alls in convenient place to keep those things which are used by all members of the family. Such things as strings, waste-paper, scissors, needles, thread, a good liniment, camphor, a few simple home medicines, a court-plaster, lantern, umbrella and numerous other things, should be where any one can place a hand on them without asking or searching for them. This can be done in the most inconvenient house with a little tact and perseverance; and always be careful to have the places for matches, ink, lye and all poisonous articles far out of the possible reach of children's hands. None of these things are theories, but are a few of the plans which I have put in practice to aid me during years of house-work on a farm where one pair of hands must do the work of laundress, dairymaid, housemaid, seamstress, nurse and cook, and I recapitulate—"Look ahead," "Begin in time," "Think before you step," "Have all that you work with convenient as possible," and "Don't worry."

And, now, if these rules are followed, thinking of your work in the pleasantest light possible, not looking upon it as a drudgery, and striving ever to be "strong, pure and patient," I think you will learn to make housekeeping, in the fullest sense of the word, a grand success.—Vesta Leroy, in Western Ploughman.

CHEAP GRAIN.

An Example Which is Commended to Farmers Who Live Where Grain Does Not Pay for Transportation.

It is unfortunate that so many American farmers are not in a position to dispose of the products of their farms to the best advantage. No farmer can afford to raise corn and sell it at from ten to twenty-five cents a bushel, and yet thousands are compelled to accept such prices in consequence of the pressing demands upon them for money at the time of gathering their crops. After harvest notes begin to come due, interest and taxes must be paid, and all those who have nothing left over from last year's sales must dispose of some kind of crop to meet the demands of their creditors and the tax gatherer. This is nothing new to a majority of farmers, and while they have been compelled to make great sacrifices year after year to meet the demands upon them, comparatively few are able to get rid of this incubus, which casts a cloud over their lives and all their operations.

In the Western States, where the farmer is compelled to haul his crops some distance to find a market, and then take whatever a local agent may choose to offer, he is likely to fare worse than in regions where there is some competition among buyers. But the farmer who is burdened with debts is a slave, and the sooner he breaks the bonds and asserts his freedom the better, even if he has to make some sacrifices in doing so. Of course we do not mean to say that a farmer should never run in debt, but he should avoid placing himself in a position where indebtedness will force him to make continual or annual sacrifices to meet interest or principal. If a man is so situated that he must sell corn for ten or fifteen cents a bushel to raise money to pay debts of any kind, he is certainly making great sacrifices to meet his obligations, and he had better lose all at once than continue to do this for any considerable number of years in succession.

But it may be said that no farmer should ever sell corn at such prices, because it is worth far more to feed hogs, sheep and cattle. This may be true, but the farmer must first obtain the animals named before he can feed them his surplus grain, and it is just here that the want of means annoys many a farmer most severely. He may see how he could make his corn worth fifty cents a bushel by turning it into pork, beef or mutton, provided he was able to hold it and purchase the animals required to consume it; but not being able to command the necessary capital, he sells at a loss, while other farmers in better circumstances may make a profit on their grain even at present low prices.

We notice a recent report of the doings of certain farmers in Butler County, Kansas, where distance from railroad communication prevented them from marketing their corn at present prices without loss. To avoid this, a large number combined and gathered together six thousand head of cattle, and to these the corn is being fed during the winter months. These cattle will consume 300,000 bushels of corn, and the cost of hauling this amount of grain will not only be saved, but, by changing it into beef, the raiser will probably obtain twice or three times as much for it as it would have brought if sold last fall. Next spring, or as soon as the cattle are ready for shipment, they can be driven to the railroads at a very trifling expense, and will doubtless command a good price, for beef has not fallen in value nearly so much as grain during the past year. In fact, meats of all kinds have held their own remarkably well during the recent depression in prices of most kinds of farm products.

The example of the Butler County farmers should be imitated by those of other counties in Kansas and elsewhere; not that all should try cattle, because such a move might tend to advance the price of steers and other young stock, but the feeding of grain on the farm to sheep, hogs, cattle, horses and poultry is the true way to dispose of it when prices are so low that it can not be sold in its natural state at a fair profit. Of course we can not undertake to advise individuals as to the best way to obtain the animals they may need in attempting to change their system of farming, but we will say that one good way to begin the change is to stop selling off the calves, lambs, pigs and other young animals, and for no better reason than because some butcher or buyer offers what you consider a good or fair price. Better keep the lambs and calves for a year or two, for, as a rule, they will advance in value one hundred per cent. per annum, while the value of their food will not be twenty-five per cent. This hankering after a little ready cash which is not actually needed has been the ruin of many an industrious and otherwise competent farmer.—N. Y. Sun.

—Every Saturday evening, when a barber shop in Troy is crowded by young mechanics getting their hair cut for Sunday, a priest who is a zealous temperance advocate arrives to get signatures to a pledge of total abstinence. He thinks that he thus saves many a fellow from spending his week's wages in a spree.—Troy (N. Y.) Times.

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S BROTHER.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher has three brothers living. One of these is the Rev. Charles Beecher, known as the writer of some of the most quaint and touching hymns in the English language. Another is the Rev. Edward Beecher, a profound theologian, far advanced in years, and living in Brooklyn, where he preaches from time to time. A third brother is the Rev. William Henry Beecher, who is spending the serene years of a mellow old age at his home, 6 Honore street, Chicago. Mr. Beecher is 84 years old, and, with the exception of the natural infirmities of age, is a hearty and vigorous old gentleman.

A gentleman who recently visited Mr. Beecher at his home, found him in an exceedingly genial frame of mind and, by no means indisposed to talk about the relief he had obtained from the rheumatism, which for many years had been a source of trouble to him. In reply to a question, the venerable gentleman remarked, "Why, you want to know about Athlophoros. It is the greatest medicine in the world for rheumatism. I had suffered with that disease for fifteen years. My hands and my joints were swelled. I had much pain, and many sleepless nights. It took my pain away, and gave me power to sleep. Do not understand me to say that my rheumatism is all gone. It would be a miracle if rheumatism could be entirely driven away from an old man like me, who has had it for years. I have some of it left, and occasionally I feel its pains. Then I take more Athlophoros, and the pains are driven away. Even if it can't entirely drive out the cause of pain from a man who has had it so long, it takes the pain away, and that is a great deal. Sometimes I had frightful pains at night, before going to bed. Then I would take a dose of Athlophoros, and I soon find the pain all gone, so that I could enjoy a calm and refreshing night's rest.

"I believe Athlophoros will cure chronic rheumatism. I know that is saying a great deal for it; but I say it. A tough old case of rheumatism like mine is very hard to cure, I know. But see my hands; they are no longer swelled as they were. I am free from the pains I used to have. I sleep well, and what more can an old man of 84 ask for?"

Mr. Beecher's daughter cheerfully confirmed what her father had said, and gave her testimony to the great advantages he had received from the use of Athlophoros.

For a number of years, Mr. C. L. Wetmore, of the well known wholesale clothing house of Messrs. Thompson & Wetmore, 151 & 153, Fifth Ave., Chicago, was greatly afflicted with rheumatism, which interfered not only with his personal comfort, but also with his ability to attend to business. He is now well.

Calling on Mr. Wetmore, at his store on Fifth avenue, the gentleman found him willing to converse as to his experience in regard to rheumatism.

"I am told, Mr. Wetmore, that you got rid of your rheumatism by the help of Athlophoros. Is that true?"

"Well, I had been for a long while troubled with rheumatism, and I had tried almost everything in the line of medicine, I may fairly say that Athlophoros finished the rheumatism, and finally overcame it. Some of the other remedies had given me relief, which proved only temporary and incomplete. But it was not so with the Athlophoros. Since I have taken it I find that I have no more rheumatic pains, either to annoy me by day, or to interfere with my sleep by night. My rheumatism was at times very severe. All my joints were swollen, and were very painful. I was detained at home sometimes as much as a month at a time, suffering acutely and unable to attend to business. Now that Athlophoros has finished the rheumatism, I am happy to say that my sleep is good, my appetite is regular and healthy, and I am every day attending to business."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS CO., 112 Wall Street, New York.

A Walking Skeleton.

Mr. E. Springer, of Meehanicsburg, Pa., writes: "I was afflicted with lung fever and abscess on lungs, and reduced to a walking Skeleton. Got a free bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, which did me so much good that I bought a dollar bottle. After using three bottles, found myself once more a man, completely restored to health, with a hearty appetite and a gain in flesh of 48lbs. Call at C. A Wright & Co's Drug Store and get a free trial bottle of this certain cure for all Lung Diseases. Large bottlee $1.00.

After the Sunday Dinner.

After the Sunday dinner, what? Well it all depends. A person whose brain is wearied with intellectual work during the week, or whose nervous system is exposed to the strain of business or professional life, ought to sleep within an hour or so after his Sunday dinner, if he can. It is surprising how much like a seven-day clock the brain will work if the habit of a Sunday nap be once formed. Nature will take advantage of it as regularly and gratefully as she does of the nightly sleep, and do her best to make up lost time. People on the other hand, whose week of toil is chiefly physical, may well give their minds activity while their bodies are resting. Two sermons and three or four hours of solid reading are a real rest to some on Sunday, while to others such a course amounts to a positive Sabbath-breaking. Sunday is a day of rest, not a day of work, religious or otherwise. It is a day of repose, not for exhaustion. But what the dogmatists on one side and the liberal liberals on the other are apt to overlook is the fact that all men do not rest alike any more than they labor alike, and what may help one may kill another.

What Do the Druggists Say?

They know what the people call for, they hear what their patrons say as to whether the medicines they buy work well or not. Martell & Johnson, Rush City, Minn., say, "Brown's Iron Bitters gives entire satisfaction to our customers." Klinkhammer & Co., Jordan, Minn., say, "We sell more Brown's Iron Bitters than all other bitters combined. L. E. Hackley & Son, Winona, Minn., say, "All our customers speak highly of Brown's Iron Bitters." A. C. Whitman, Jackson, Minn., says, "Brown's Iron Bitters is giving good satisfaction to purchasers." These are only a few. We have hundreds more just as good.

A Pretty Story.

"I believe in a providence," said Victor Hugo to a company gathered around him in the Rue de Clichy, "because I am a providence myself." Being asked for an explanation, the poet repled: "We caught a mouse yesterday evening. His death sentence was already pronounced, when my little granddaughter, Jeanne, with eyes glistening with tears, begged for the life of the gray prisoner. Her mother hesitated whether to listen to the dear little advocate or not, and in her doubt said, 'Grandfather shall decide.' So they came to me. For a moment I held the power of life and death over the diminutive creature, and I thought: The heavenly providence may find itself in my situation when the fate of a being of a higher order is to be determined. Naturally I set the mouse free; for when a man undertakes the role of providence on a small scale, he should at least imitate generosity."

Wonders Never Cease.

Prof. C. Donaldson, New Orleans, La., proprietor of Museums, who suffered eighteen years with rheumatic pains, states he has spent ten thousand dollars to get cured. After trying doctors, famous baths, electric appliances and legions of liniments without relief he tried St. Jacobs Oil, which completely cured him. It is a wonderful remedy, he says, and he has sold his crutches.

Among spring preparations, do not neglect that which is most important of all—your own body. It expells every impurity from the blood, and gives strength to every function of the body. Sold by all druggists.

I have been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years. I could not tell how many different remedies I have tried, and none seemed to reach my case like Ely's Cream Balm. I had lost my smell entirely for the last fifteen years, and I had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were getting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as fine a needle as I ever did, and my smell is partly restored, and it seems to be improving all the time. I think there is nothing like Ely's Cream Balm for Catarrh. I always had a trouble with my throat and a little hacking cough, and I am almost well of that. Mrs. F. E. Grimes, 67 Valley St., Rendrill, Perry Co., Ohio.

The entertainment presented to the public by the High School Juniors last Thursday evening was well attended. The essays were well written and read in a manner pleasing to all. The recitations were all well rendered, making it a difficult matter to decide which deserved the most praise. The readings and recitations were interspersed with music, orchestral and vocal, which was well appreciated. Prof. Laflin has reason to feel proud of his pupils, and the pupils of their teacher. The net profit was about $16.

Pursuant to call, a dozen or more of the scholars of the Clinton Union School twenty-five years ago, met together at the residence of J. B. Hause last Friday evening, to take the initiatory steps toward holding a reunion of the scholars and teachers of the above school at that time. Letters had been written to some away from here in regard to the matter, and replies from three or four have been received, including one from Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Williams, expressing a desire to come and be with us at a convenient time in the month of May. This re-union of the teachers and scholars of the first year of our Union School's history, is looked forward to with a good deal of interest by those who are to participate, many of whom have not met in a quarter of a century. The meeting was called to order by J. B. Hause, who in a few brief words set forth its object, etc.

Ed. VanDeMark was, on motion declared elected permanent chairman, and J. E. McCollum, permanent secretary.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

T. W. Beech has exchanged his hotel for A. Sanford's saloon, and an unpleasantness has culminated in our school, which is of doubtful benefit.

Divorces are ripening in gardens of discord, and no end of variety accrues from winters idleness, though some date back to last summers moonlight. Few people are rearly harmed by escaping from a quarrel although their last dime is exacted for the badly mussed liberty returned with no thanks to them. Children are the aggravation. Kites flown in such battles, and its to be regretted trundle-beds are not attached to them. Ministers may think different, but I have no doubt such double barreled intimidation would put most any man to flight and have a wholesome effect on his intended successor. There is nothing like parading the whole paraphanalia of number one's happiness to make number two's doubtful of its being worth the fuss. Difference prevents sending to the Legislature this economic plan for scaring off impediments to domestic freedom, but whoever wants a cheap discouragement is welcome to try it. I suppose staying married must be the only blessed fate of humanity, if the Bible says so: but there is such a difference between the ethereal sanctity of the obligation preached, and the material cranks it by by which its holiness is illustrated, that one drifts far enough into heresy to inquire if Heaven meant to sanction a fraud or whether the printer made a blunder. Of course no HERALD correspondent is heartless enough to advocate divorce, but I'll wager my biggist spring toad that if those Lansing clerics were in the same plight as some of our interested, they would withdraw their pet bill and substitute a petition to drown themselves in buttermilk.

THE WESTERN TERMINUS OF THE M. & O.

A correspondent of the Toledo Bee gives the readers of that paper some facts in relation to Muskegon and the future prospects of the Michigan and Ohio Railroad. With through trains running between Toledo and Muskegon on their own track, the M. and O. will become one of the best trunk lines traversing this state.

I ran over to Muskegon a few days since, and in accordance with my promise, herewith present a few items, which I hope may prove of interest to the business men of Toledo, and your large circle of readers in general.

By a recent arrangement made between the managers of the Michigan & Ohio Railway, and the managers of the Chicago & West Michigan system of railways, whose chief offices and termini are in this city, a direct route has been opened between Toledo and Muskegon, by which that vast lumber mart will be brought into active and successful competition with that of the Saginaw region. In the accomplishment of this object the railroads I have named will play an important part, for which they are thoroughly equipped.

The Michigan & Ohio is essentially a Toledo road, which passes in an oblique line across the Michigan Peninsula, through some of the best agricultural counties of that State to Allegan, where it forms a junction with the Chicago & West Michigan system of railroads, and from thence to Muskegon and Grand Rapids. The distance from Toledo to Muskegon is 214 miles, 12 miles in excess of the distance from Toledo to Cincinnati. The running time between these cities is about the same in each case, while the low grade of the M & O., its superior rolling stock and its gravel ballasted road bed makes travel over it very agreeable.

It is difficult to estimate the benefits that may result from this important combination. The Chicago and West Michigan Co. are now operating over 400 miles of railway, some 250 miles of which will now become tributary to the business interests of Toledo, and of Central Ohio and by a short and direct route over the Michigan & Ohio, its low rates of freight will enable it to meet successfully all competitors. This to the consumer of lumber means a widely extended source of supply, sharp competition, and lower rates.

In trade, as in all other mundane affairs the principle of reciprocity goes a good way in augmenting the volume of traffic. The same circumstances of advantage by which the Muskegon lumber manufacturer sends his products to the Toledo market, will also enable the Toledo merchants and manufacturers to supply their products to the dwellers in Muskegon and West Michigan.

The harbor of Muskegon is admitted to be the best on Lake Michigan, and its entrance is at all times unobstructed from ice. The time is regarded as not distant when the port of Muskegon will become the medium by which a portion of the vast products of the Northwest will find their way to the Eastern seaboard by an almost air line route from Muskegon via Toledo and the City of Wheeling, to Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York.

With a view to this it is reported in Muskegon that the Mich. & Ohio will extend their line to the mouth of that harbor so as to secure at the earliest period a share of the through freight which is now being sent from Milwaukee to Grand Haven. That will be the initial process in the movement. The increasing traffic from and to the Northwest will accomplish the rest, and if the signs of the times are correct we may soon find Toledo on the line of another trunk railroad over which both passengers and freight will pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific by a route or routes which are already established, and which will be found both shorter and better than those over which that traffic now passes.

A WORD ABOUT TAXATION.

EDITOR HERALD:—I noticed an error in your issue of March 19th on the remarks made by me at the residence of Mr. A. D. Hall on the evening of the 6th before the Farmers' Club on the question—Is it right to require persons to pay taxes on property they are indebted for? As the last part of my remarks was not fairly represented, it is but justice to myself that I should correct the error. The statement made by the reporter was, that I thought it would be unjust to exempt the farmer from paying taxes on land owned by him whether he was indebted for it or not. There is no wrong in relieving the burdens of one class if it does not increase the burdens of the other. It is to the latter that I impute the wrong. By exempting the first, you place the burden of such exemption on the latter. It would be quite superfluous to enter into any lengthened argument to show the utility or necessity of raising taxes for the use of the state and as my former opinion of right in taxing property on which we owe has been strengthened by a more mature consideration of the question, I am compelled to adhere to the former in treating of taxation. The object of the political economist is to enquire and point out the effects of taxation on individuals and property, and by analyzing the various methods in which taxes may be raised in a manner least objectionable to the masses. Suppose that the one half of the real estate and personal property in Michigan was encumbered and by virtue of its encumbrance it should be exempt from taxation, would not the other half have to bear the burdens of such exemption? But it was agreed by exempting the indebted property and placing the taxes of such exemption on the holders of such bonds would be a more equal and just distribution of the taxes. A theory of this kind, in my judgment, is inexpedient and inadmissable. The difficulty of getting the invisible property placed fairly and honestly on the tax roll is admitted to be one of grave uncertainties. No inquisition into the private affairs of individuals can ever discover the amount of money and credits held by large capitalists. Many of the bonds and mortgages are held by individuals residing in other states and are taxed where they are held, and it would be an act of injustice to impose a double portion of taxes on such bonds, provided it could be imposed. These are the wrongs alluded to by me on the evening of the 6th ult, at the Farmers' Club.

FORCE OF HABIT.

How Farmers Dull Their Natural Aptitude for Business Pursuits.

Farmers and their sons frequently dwarf their intellects and dull their natural aptitude for successful business pursuits by neglecting to be constantly learning something useful. It is the impression of many farmers that they have no time to read the standard useful books from the fact that after a hard day's work they are too weary to read a line that night. There may be some plausibility in such an excuse to one [illegible] and weary days [illegible]. But it is not true. It is a [illegible] of a farmer has not many hours [illegible] which not required for labor or sleep, which could and should be devoted to storing his mind and making it active and useful. The mind, like the muscles of the body, if not exercised, and strengthened by use and culture, will become inactive, dormant and feeble, so much so that the man has not the ability nor inclination to read or study, and therefore concludes there is no time to do so. The writer, in his long life, has witnessed bright boys growing up to manhood, neglecting to store and strengthen their minds until by long habit they had not desire or hardly capacity to exercise the brains Providence had endowed them with. Such living cases are now in our minds of aged farmers who started out in life with a reasonable amount of intellect and who might have been bright and useful men, or ornaments to societies and an honor to the families they have raised. But they commenced, as too many do yet, worked hard with limited educations, but who never appear to appreciate the value of useful lessons to be acquired by careful reading, at leisure time, the standard books on history, art and science. Habit soon deadened all such aspirations. They reared large families of a down grade of intellect and accumulated property, but when they really ought to have been in the prime of life they were premature old men and have a poor prospect of enjoying that evening of rest and contentment which beautifies and blesses the man who has lived right. Instead of enjoyment in life's evening of physical rest, by the aid of an active mind, still eager in the desire to acquire more mental diet of a character to prepare them not only for life's afternoon, but for eternity, they are barely waiting to die.

The writer last fall visited the scenes of his early life, to meet the few of his boyhood associates who are yet pursuing life's journey. He found only rust and mildew when he should have met ripe old men with little impairment by old age. They had exemplified in their lives the truth of the inexorable physical law, as well as the law of God, that he who buries his talent, "that which he hath shall be taken from him." The habit of dwarfing their minds by not using them, until they have no desire for literary or mental culture, had rendered them pitiable objects of contemplation. In their eyes there was no more sparkle of life or intelligence than in the lowest order of dumb brutes. Their enjoyments appeared to be of no higher order than that of the oyster in its native bed. From their youth up they had buried their talents, and that which they had was dormant, silent and stupid. So we say to the farmer boys, improve your talent, or you shall not have it to enjoy.—Iowa State Register.

HOTEL THIEVES.

The Way They Conduct Their Operations With Success.

"I see by the dispatches that the hotel thieves are making business for the detectives in Chicago and the West generally," said Chief of Detectives Kelly last night. "Aside from the expert bank burglar and house-breaker, the only criminals who can command any respect from the detective is the expert hotel thief," added the Chief, reflectively. "Why? Because he must be intelligent, adroit and possessed of a perfect nerve. In point of intelligence I would even rank the hotel thief above the bank burglar or sneak, who are accorded the front rank in the criminal profession. Prerequisite to the hotel thief are education and a good address, which is usually obtained by travel. He is generally dignified; well but quietly dressed, and with the general appearance of a man of business. The crack hotel thieves ordinarily travel in pairs, although they are, to all appearances, unknown to each other.

"The first night after registering at a hotel they sleep late, and when roused by the chambermaid request her to call them at noon. When the maid has completed her labors in the corridor in which their rooms are located their business begins. The vacant rooms are located, and while one thief stands on watch his confederate effects an entrance to an unoccupied room by means of a skeleton key and closes the door behind him. He then rapidly bores a hole immediately over the bolt and fills up each end with white putty. If the lock is a double one, as is the case in many first-class hotels, a small hole is drilled through it so that nippers can be used on the inside lock in turning the key after the victim has retired. A half dozen rooms can be 'fixed' in this way within an hour. This completes the work for the morning. The afternoon is utilized in making themselves 'solid' with the regular guests over the bar and in watching the register for guests assigned to the 'fixed' rooms.

"When every one has gone to bed one thief resumes his watch and 'pipes off' the watchman while his confederate works the rooms. This is done in short order and the thieves are away by daylight. The tools used by the hotel thieves are of the finest tempered steel and consist of a 'bar-key,' used for opening big locks; a set of six bits, arranged for either stem or tumbler locks; a small drill, a file, a sectional stem or 'widdy,' several pieces of wire and a pair of nippers. Some putty or pigment is also included in the kit, which is easily carried about the person. I am glad to say that we have not had a professional hotel thief in Philadelphia during the past year."—Philadelphia Ner.

with everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn in the days of emigration to California, he noticed that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of a chronic disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, as a result of careful observation, declares that, in his opinion, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally, either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland House, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

—If the store-room is dry, and the sugar dries and becomes lumpy, substitute a jar for the wooden box, and note the result. If ants find their way inside, tie a cloth around the cover—not the jar—and the contents are safe.

—Ants can be driven away by applications of gas tar, but it is doubtful whether it is profitable to get rid of them in the neighborhood of apple trees, as ants prey upon plant-lice, which do much damage to foliage at a time when it is needed for starting the young fruit.—Chicago Journal.

—White Pound Cake: Two coffee cups of white sugar, three-fourths of a coffee cup of butter, one coffee cup of milk, three coffee cups of flour, whites of nine eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, grated rind of one lemon, stir the butter and sugar to a cream, add the milk and flour, and last the whites of eggs whipped to a stiff froth.—The Household.

The docility and thorough understanding of their duties shown by horses belonging to city fire departments suggests to the National Live Stock Journal that the coercive system too commonly practiced on farms by hired help, if not by the owner, is not the one to secure the best results. Education is better than the whip in securing intelligent and thorough service from farm as well as fire horses.

—The more crowns a strawberry plant has, the more berries one can expect. Pull off all the leaves after fruiting except two or three, and it causes more crowns to grow, besides bright, fresh and very green leaves. But before one goes into strawberry culture he should take account of the manure he can get, and also find out whether he can get pickers enough when the season opens. It is of little use to think of raising strawberries for market without manure and pickers in abundance.—Cleveland Leader.

CLEAN FEEDING.

The Outbreaks in Kentucky and West Virginia Emphasize Its Necessity.

In many quarters reports of fatal disease in cattle are circulating, most of which indicate symptoms which are caused by unwholesome food. A great lesson which stockmen and farmers have to learn is that clean feeding—and this includes watering—is as necessary to the health of their animals as it is to their own. A very pertinent example and a warning are given in the recent outbreaks of disease among the population of parts of Eastern Kentucky and West Virginia, where the water is not only in poor supply, but where sanitary conditions as regards drainage and the disposal of indispensable filthy matter, are very much neglected. Similar, but not such extreme cases are occurring in rural villages where diseases are wholly unexpected and occasion much surprise. And yet the causes are apparent to any person who realizes how easily the soil is polluted and the springs and streams are made impure. Farmers know very well how prevalent the various fungoid parasites of plants are; how the grasses and fodder crops are infested with smut, rust, ergot and mildew, and how frequently the dried fodder and grain become moldy and musty and partly decayed from exposure. But they do not realize the fact that in every impurity of whatever kind, whether from animal excretions or from parasitic diseases of plants, there lurks a source and occasion of fatal disorder to their cattle. As soon as the dry feeding begins, and cattle and swine are turned out into the stubbles and stalk fields, or into the frozen, water-soaked meadows, or are confined in pens or yards, then diseases break out, and all are of the malignant febrile type, which indicate blood poisoning by parasitic germs conveyed into the vital fluid by the food or the water.

To seek advice from the veterinary surgeons or relief from medicines is beginning at the wrong end. The evil must be remedied at its source. No pure stream can flow from a polluted source, and the whole course and method of feeding stock must be reformed before the trouble can be averted. The losses every year are enormous. The indirect damage is as great as the direct money losses by the death of valuable animals. The credit of our trade is impaired, and the loss of a million head by disease, which is in fact a very moderate estimate of the sum total, injuriously affects the value of the seventy or eighty millions of cattle and swine which escape. The present season seems to forbode a greater loss than the past one, for the area over which disease prevails spreads over nearly all the States and Territories from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is wise that stockmen should be alarmed and watchful, but from anything which occurred at the recent general convention of cattlemen it does not seem that those most interested look deeply enough into the matter to realize the actual source of the trouble or the right point at which to attack it.—N. Y. Times.

William Whiteside, of Lancaster, Pa., writes: "For over six years, I was afflicted with diarrhœa. Mishler's Herb Bitters cured me and improved my general health. There is no remedy in the world that can show a similar record of cases, covering so large a range of diseases, as this great household specific. Kidney and liver complaints, indigestion, foul stomach, dizziness, nausea, sick headache, etc., all yield to the magic of its treatment.

There are more than 600 varieties of the chrysanthemum, the national flower of Japan.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Mary A. Dailey, of Tunkhannock, Pa., was afflicted for six years with Asthama and Bronchitis, during which time the best physicians could give no relief. Her life was despaired of, until in last October she procured a Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, when immediate relief was felt, and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured, gaining in flesh 50 lbs. in a few months. The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

It is a well known fact in scientific circles that Baking Powder should be made from Grape Cream Tartar and Soda only. DeLand & Co., great manufacturers of Soda and Saleratus, use only the above in their Chemical Baking Powder, thereby giving the consumer full value and avoiding the use of alum, ammonia, or any other deleterious substances. Their wide experience in the manufacture of Soda and Saleratus insure a perfect scientific combination and give the consumer one hundred parts Baking Powder, which means economy, health, and excellent pastry.

The occupants of the stores and the hotel were not disturbed in the removal.

C. A. Wright & Co. wish to make an assertion, which they can back with a positive guarantee. It is all about Acker's Blood Elixir. They claim for it superior merits over all other remedies of its kind, and guarantee for it a positive and sure cure for Rheumatism Syphillis, and all blood disorders. It frees the skin from spots and disease, and leaves the complexion clear. Ask them about it.

C. A. Wright & Co. would specially recommend to the ladies Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets. As a laxative they have no equal. They are guaranteed to cure Chronic Constipation, Dyspepsia, and all diseases arising from a deranged stomach. With a free use of the Tablets, Sick Headache is impossible.

Good Advice for Everybody.

1. Never, under any circumstances assume a responsibility that you can avoid consistently with your duty to yourself and others.

2. Base all your actions upon a principle of right; preserve your integrity of character, and in doing this never reckon on the cost.

3. Remember that self-interest is much more likely to warp your judgment than all other circumstances combined; therefore look well to your duty when your interest is concerned.

4. Never make money at the expense of your reputation.

5. Be neither lavish or niggardly. Of the two, avoid the latter. A mean man is universally despised, but public favor is a stepping stone to preferment; therefore generous feelings should be cultivated.

6. Say but little; think much and do more.

7. Let your expenses be such as to leave a balance in your pocket. Ready money is a friend in need.

8. Avoid borrowing and lending.

9. Wine drinking and cigar smoking are bad habits; they impair the health and pocket, and lead to a waste of time.

10. Never relate your misfortunes, and never grieve over what you cannot prevent.

11. Cultivate promptness in deciding upon matters that come before you; there are few objects more disagreeable than an undecided, vacillating man. Consider thoughtfully, but decide promptly.

12. Never break a business engagement of any kind, if it be possible to meet it. Let nothing cause you to become careless of business etiquette, integrity and promptitude.

13. Let truth and an unwavering faith in God underlie all your motives and actions.

Was by throwing up all my stomach contained. No one can conceive the pains that I had to go through, until "At last"
I was taken! "So that for three weeks I lay in bed and

March April May

When the weather grows warmer, that extreme tired feeling, want of appetite, dullness, languor, and lassitude, afflict almost the entire human family, and scrofula and other diseases caused by humors, manifest themselves with many. It is impossible to throw off this debility and expel humors from the blood without the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I could not sleep, and would get up in the morning with hardly life enough to get out of bed. I had no appetite, and my face would break out with pimples. I bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling, and my appetite improved." R. A. SANFORD, Kent, O.

"I had been much troubled by general debility. Last spring Hood's Sarsaparilla proved just the thing needed. I derived an immense amount of benefit. I never felt better." H. F. MILLER, Boston, Mass.

"At no other season is the system so susceptible to the beneficial effects of a reliable tonic and invigorant. The impure state of the blood, the deranged digestion, and the weak condition of the body, caused by its long battle with the cold, wintry blasts, all call for the reviving, regulating and restoring influences so happily and effectively combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla did me a great deal of good. I had no particular disease, but was tired out from overwork, and it toned me up." MRS. G. E. SIMMONS, Cohoes, N. Y.

"For seven years, spring and fall, I had scrofulous sores come out on my legs, and for two years was not free from them at all. I suffered very much. Last May I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken two bottles, the sores healed and the humor left me." C. A. ARNOLD, Arnold, Me.

We appeal to the intelligence and good management required to save your strength and take this method to place in your hands an agent, which, with absolute safety to the fabric, will wash clothes with less work than any other in the world.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES WOMEN.
ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain: it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

Chas. R. Wortman, one of the candidates on the fusion ticket for regents, is a resident of Ypsilanti. He is a young man of excellent ability, a graduate of both the literary and law departments of the University and well fitted in every respect to fill the position with honor to the state and credit to himself. His nomination is a peculiarly happy one. He has much personal strength outside of his party where he is known, and the fusionists should see to it that his interests are fully protected elsewhere. With proper effort both the candidates for regents on the fusion ticket can be elected.

The country was shocked on Tuesday by news that Gen. Grant was in a dying condition. Yesterday the news was somewhat reassuring. He was reported much better, having passed a good night. It is feared however that he is stricken with his last illness, and that his demise is rapidly and surely approaching.

LATER.—The latest news in the papers of this morning shows that Gen. Grant is rapidly failing. In addition to the cancer in his throat his heart has become affected, and he is very weak. He may live three or four days but he is liable to drop away at any moment.

The Scientific American, which is a recognized authority on all subjects relating to patents, says of the new Commissioner of Patents:

The President has appointed as commissioner of patents Martin V. Montgomery of Michigan, a well-known lawyer, a man of marked ability, vigor and industry. He has always been noted for his success in accomplishing whatever he undertakes, but his undertakings of responsibilities have been rare; in fact, he is celebrated for his declinations of many proffered places of honor and profit, which ordinary people would have been only too glad to accept. Judging from his antecedents, the new commissioner is not likely to allow the patent office to remain very long in its present unsatisfactory condition. All persons connected with the establishment will be expected to wake up to renewed exertions, and use every endeavor to put an end to the harrassing delays of business which have for so long a time obstructed the usefulness of the bureau.

Tice, daughter of H. K. Tice, a leading merchant and manufacturer of Hagerstown, Maryland. In 1884 Mr. Miller was a candidate for governor but withdrew his name before the meeting of the convention and used his influence to nominate Mr. Wilson who was chosen governor over Mr. Marye. In the campaign of 1884, which was the most spirited West Virginia ever had, Mr. Miller was most active for his party and did noble service in its behalf.

WILLIAM H. WALDBY.

The pansies were in full blossom. Mr. [illegible] of Cooperstown, Otsego county, N. Y., when a boy, subscribed, pretty named Wm. H. Waldby, joined the procession that is ever hurrying from the cradle to the grave. In 1836 his parents moved to Utica. Later Mr. W. was attended Utica academy, and at 12 years removed with his father's family to Rome, N. Y., where his father, a printer in younger days, founded the Rome Sentinel, now widely known. Wm. H. "devilled" for the office, mastered the "art perservative" and kept the office books. At 17 was clerk in a store—removed to Adrian in 40 and became clerk in Bidwell's store—after three years became partner with Bidwell and opened clothing store—firm name Bidwell & Waldby—sold some excellent "fits"—given management of the business—managed successfully—in 50 was partner with Bidwell in the banking business and manager of the concern—in 51 purchased Bidwell's interest and became sole proprietor—in 57 erected and occupied banking house—formed partnership with his brother, E. I. Waldby. In 72 sold building and business to first national bank of Adrian—not banking now—able not to. In '73 elected mayor on democratic ticket by 614 majority in a then republican city—was popular as mayor—appointed by Gov. Croswell in '73 member of commission to locate reform school for girls—result, Adrian secured that important institution—was member of board of control one year—resigned after seeing the school securely planted at Adrian—urged to run for Congress in '80 on democratic ticket—reluctantly consented—bad year for democrats—Willits took the persimmons—has built many of Adrian's handsomest residences—lives in elegant mansion himself—methodical in all public and private business—in excellent bodily and mental health, and bids fair to live long and enjoy the fortune his own energy and enterprise have built up.—Detroit Evening News.

An interesting and timely article on the "Framers of the Constitution," with twenty or more portraits, is the opening gem of the beautiful Magazine of American History for April. It is the first instance in the historic literature of America, of the successful grouping of the whole fifty five of these remarkable men, in one vivid perpicture. The editor has performed a service that will be gratefully appreciated by hosts of students and writers, and by readers of all grades and ages the country through. The exact data given will prove a great help to teachers, and it should be made as familiar to every American child as the multiplication table. The other articles of the number are of exceptional merit, including as usual a wide range of topics. Original documents contain a "Curious Petition of the Boston Ministers in 1709." Notes, queries, replies, societies, and book notices are crowded with agreeable material. The Magazine of American History is the only one of the great leading magazines that from time to time delights its audience with an exquisite frontispiece in steel, as in this current number. Price, $5 a year in advance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The minister of a fashionable church in Harrisburg, who was being continually interrupted by the violent coughing of one of his flock, stopped suddenly in the midst of his sermon and requested the congregation to take up a collection for the purpose of supplying the noisy brother with a bottle of Red Star Cough Cure. This newly discovered anti-narcotic remedy is becoming extremely popular on account of its wonderful efficacy. Postmaster Adreon, of Baltimore, endorses it highly, and the Commissioner of Health of the same city certifies officially that it is a most valuable and effective discovery.

THE BOHEMIAN OAT QUESTION

EDITOR HERALD: In your paper of last week I read an article headed "The Other Side," which is printed at the request of a Macon farmer in which a letter in the Orange Visitor has a [illegible] say about Bohemian oats. Now Mr. Editor I am an old fashioned farmer and I don't [illegible] anything [illegible] to see the strange [illegible] in the Herald going and [illegible] [illegible] H. says that [illegible] Perhaps [illegible] The [illegible] H. says [illegible] anybody [illegible] that a horse for which a man pays $[illegible] will [illegible] more than one that can be bought for $[illegible] or that a cow that a farmer pays $[illegible] for will give any more milk or make any more butter than one that can be bought for $[illegible]. Perhaps not. But when a man pays $[illegible] for a thoroughbred horse or $[illegible] for a high bred cow he does so with his eyes open and takes his chances. He is not inveigled into the purchase by a company of which he knows nothing under a pledge that they will buy of him ten times as many horses or cows within a year at the same extravagant figure. He is not led into giving his negotiable note for the oats he buys which must be paid when due for it always turns up in the hands of third parties, but if the company refuse or neglect to buy his oats the next year at ten dollars per bushel, he has no redress except at the end of a law suit, and probably not then. The fact that these oats can be bought at a mill in Cleveland for one dollar a bushel shows that this is about their fair market value, and any man who pays ten dollars a bushel for them is reasonable sure of getting swindled. A man who pays $1000 for a high bred cow, pays what that cow will bring in the open market, and stands a reasonable show of getting his money back within a few years or at least a reasonable interest on his investment. This whole Bohemian oat business is a fraud, like grain options and stock jobbing. A few favored ones, who are in the ring, expect to make something and probably will, but nine tenths of the men who invest will be treated as "lambs" and will go home handsomely shorn. And that is the way this Bohemian oats business looks to

AN OLD FASHIONED FARMER.

It has been said, and with much truth that the best novels of this decade have been written by women, and young women at that. However this may be, we can say that two of the best novels now appearing in serial form are by women and in Cassell's Family Magazine. "A Diamond in the rough," by Alice O'Hanlon, and "Sweet Christabel," by Arabella M. Hopkinson. Two more charming stories of English life it would be hard to imagine. Besides these serials this magazine publishes by way of fiction this month a story in three short chapters, "How She Saved Him," "Frank De Vaud," a story of Swiss life and "An Old Maid's Friends". Articles of a more practical nature tell us "How American Bread is Made," of "The Road to the Giant's Causeway," of the special features of "Shareholders' Meetings," of "Wild Birds in London," of "Work in the Garden," and last, but very far from least, "What to Wear." We certainly think that the Fashion Department of this magazine is the best of any we know. Illustrations abound in this number. Cassell & Co., Limited, New York, $1.50 a year.

A large crowd was present last Saturday evening to see the race at the Tecumseh rink between Mont Rowland and Al. Heesen. It was won by the latter, by one-half a lap, in five minutes. Heesen took the lead in the start, and kept it to the finish. Young Mont hugged him close until the fifteenth lap, when he lost his balance and stumbled to the floor, but he was up again and continued the race to the finish, although he lost half a lap by the accident. On account of there being so much chalk on the floor it was difficult for Mont to turn the corners and he consequently lost time. The race will be repeated at an early day.

In the polo game last Tuesday evening, the juniors were beaten by the seniors three to one.

THE FIFTH ENTERTAINMENT.

The Library Association committee seem to be peculiarly unfortunate in their entertainments. Not in the quality of the entertainments for they have all been exceptionally good but in the fact that they always strike a stormy night. The fifth entertainment, on Monday evening last consisted of readings and recitations by Mrs. Elizabeth Mansfield Irving and selections by the Alhambra Banjo and Guitar club of Toledo. The program was intensely interesting from first to last and deserved a better house. The Alhambras execute a jovial rollicking class of music, consisting of waltzes, quicksteps etc., which take most favorably not only with musicians but with a mixed audience. Their selections were all well received.

Mrs. Irving is a dramatic reader of considerable reputation. This was her first appearance before a Tecumseh audience and they were entirely captivated. She possesses a full, resonant, musical voice, easy gestures, excellent facial expression and superior dramatic ability. It is no flattery to say that Tecumseh people have never listened to a better dramatic reader. We hope she may be persuaded to visit us again.

After the evening's entertainment Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Mills gave Mrs. Irving and the Club an informal reception at their home on Union street, in which a goodly number of our music-loving citizens participated, who gladly availed themselves of this opportunity to form a personal acquaintance with Mrs. Irving and the Alhambras. The reception was entirely informal, but it was none the less enjoyed on that account. After a lunch of sandwiches, coffee and cake, an hour was pleasantly passed in social converse, interspersed with orchestra music by the Alhambras, and piano selections by home talent. The midnight hour was struck before the guests had all departed for their homes.

The Toledo Commercial of yesterday morning has the following item:

The Alhambra Club returned to the city yesterday from Tecumseh, Mich., where they and Mrs. Elizabeth Mansfield Irving gave a grand musical and literary entertainment the night before. The program was very select, and consisted of fourteen numbers, which were admirably carried out. The opera house was crowded with the elite of the city, who were not at all backward in showing their appreciation. At the conclusion of the program, the club repaired to the residence of Mr. Mills, where they were tendered an elegant reception, which lasted until a late hour. The boys are loud in their praises of the courteous manner in which they were received and the hearty hospitality shown them by the Tecumseh people.

THE PUBLIC EXAMINATIONS.

The public examinations in the several departments of the schools took place on Thursday and Friday of last week; in the Central building on Thursday and in the branch buildings on Friday. Numerous visitors were in attendance in all the rooms. The examinations passed off to the satisfaction of both teachers and spectators, and presumably so to the pupils, as the latter were almost universally successful in "passing." The regular schedule of daily recitations was observed except on Friday afternoon, when Longfellow Memorial exercises were held in the several branch buildings.

Prof. Hammond and the teachers are to be congratulated on the prosperous condition of the schools at present. The departments are all running smoothly and harmoniously, the pupils are making rapid progress and the patrons are satisfied.

The special appropriation made at the last annual school meeting for new apparatus has been partly expended to good use. Reading Charts have been provided for the primary departments, and a lot of models made to illustrate the action of mechanical powers in the natural philosophy classes. A large supply of chemicals has also been purchased for the high school. Immediate steps will be taken to replenish the library by the addition of about thirty new volumes and Prof. Hammond is now engaged in preparing a list of the books desired. The regular spring vacation of one week occurs this week.

The spring term will open on Monday next under the most flattering auspices for a successful term's work.

THE GUMBOS VISIT THE RINK.

Jerusha had folded up the tablecloth and hung the dish rag over the stove pipe to dry after supper last evening, had dressed Sally's scalp would and given Sammy his bowl of bread and milk, and was lotting on having a quiet evening, when Joshua rushed in, threw a "dollar of the daddy's" on the table and exclaimed—

"Now then, Jerusha, my mind's made up. I'm bound to have a little recreation. I've bin shavin' on't 'n shavin' on't fer the last six months. This house has bin converted into a horsepittle for more'n four weeks. I've had extra grocery bills to meet and an extra hired gal to pay to help nuss the young uns, and I'm gittin worked out. I haint bin to no hoss races nor base ball games since last summer. I'm going to the rink. What d'ye say, Jerusha? Let's visit the rink. I went in t'other night to spectator on't, and was just more'n facinated. Why, hang it, Jerusha, it beats all, the way the fellers and their gals roll round on them rollers. Some folks thinks its hard to learn, but t'aint. Its just as easy as rollin' off a log. And, my stars, Jerusha, everybody goes. Why, hang it, we're gitten behind the times. Old men and wimen, the boys and the gals, the dudes and the dudesses are all rollin' round promiscussly like balls on a billiard table. And then the grand march. Why, hang it, I never seen nothin' like it since Barnum's carrywan wisited this town with Tom Thumb. It beats an Uncle Tom's Cabin show all holler.

Now pause for a minute
And just stop to think,
You'll never be happy
'Till you wisit the rink.
Its better'n new bunnits
Or wittles and drink
To go rollin' around
On the floor of the rink.
You needn't be bashful,
For I've got the chink
To buy tickets and skates
For a night at the rink.
Come, put on your fixins
As quick as a wink
And down we will go
Fer a roll in the rink.
Just put by yer quiltin'
And yer paper and ink,
And go and be one of
The crowd at the rink.
Why, hang it, Jerusha,
You'll be prettier 'n a pink
When rollin' around
With the gals in the rink.
Stand up to the racket
And don't try and slink,
You'll never regret
What you give to the rink.
The hum of the rollers,
Their rattle necklink,
Is the music you'll hear
On the floor of the rink.
Shut off yer excuses,
Don't bluster and blink;
But slap on yer bunnit,
And go to the rink.
From duty, no Gumbo
Was ever known to shrink,
And duty now tells us
To wisit the rink.
And handsomely link
Your arm into Gumbo's,
And we'll anty down Pocahontas alley, and thence up Railroad street and take a bee line to the rink.

Well, to make a long story short, Jerusha was overpersuaded and Mr. and Mrs. Gumbo went to the rink. They stopped at the hardware and procured two pair of steel-roller double-spring, self-clamping, air-brake, automatic skates, a new invention lately patented by a certain military genius of Clinton, which were warranted to run ten miles without oiling. Upon arriving at the scene of action they found the floor well filled and the spectators benches comfortably lined with lookers on. Their skates were properly secured in position, Joshua and Jerusha locked arms, the manager said "One, two, three, go." and away they went. The gentlemen spectators held their hats on and the ladies indulged in their smelling bottles and breathless anxiety while the new candidates made their debut. For the first fifteen or twenty feet they sailed along majestically. The grand march was cutting a double pigeon-wing at the time. In their attempt to avoid a collision Joshua flew the track.

In just six minutes the steamer was on the ground, the hose was unwound, and a two inch stream of water soon quieted the tumult. In the mean time the crowd which gathered set at work to care for the wounded. Strange to say no one was seriously hurt. People never get hurt at the rink. There were some bloody noses and several black eyes, but no broken bones. Gumbo, who formed the foundation stone of the pyramid, was squeezed out three feet longer and as flat as a buckwheat pancake. Jerusha, who stood upright as the crowd was packed around her like sardines in a box, was flattened t'other way. When finally released she was only three feet six inches tall and six feet three inches in circumference. Joshua was carried home on a shutter, and Jerusha was transported on Tommy Mark's best drayy. The grand march did'nt reform that evening. But the manager is happy to announce that business will be resumed as usual at the old stand to-morrow night.

ALVIN JOSLIN IS COMING.

The Alvin Joslin Comedy company will appear at the Opera House on Tuesday evening next, April 7th. Uncle Alvin has been in these parts before, and he is always greeted with an enthusiastic reception. He will have a crowded house of course. People who wish a choice of seats had better secure them early.

The Alvin Joslin Comedy company showed at the opera house last night to a large audience. Mr. Davis is a capital representative of the Yankee character, bringing to his task a genuine talent for impersonating old men parts. The orchestra was the best ever brought to Newberg by a traveling company, and the music itself was worth the price of admission.—Daily Register.

The People's Theater was crowded last night on the occasion of the opening performance of "Alvin Joslin" by Charles Davis and company. The play is as familiar to theatre goers as any on the stage, and Mr. Davis as "Uncle Alvin" is recognized as the inimitable exponent of that eccentric character that it is unnecessary to say more than that the audience was highly satisfied with the performance and was generous with applause. Mr. Davis' company is a very fair one and his orchestra is one of the best traveling musical organizations that has been heard here for some time, the soloists being encored time and again. The diamonds were dazzling in their brightness, and altogether the performance was a very pleasant one. Again to-night.—Cincinnati Times Star.

EXZEMA OR SALT RHEUM.
Another Clear and Positive Recover—An Elderly Lady's Letter.
Among the numerous letters received by Dr. Kennedy, testifying to notable Salt Rheum cures the following will be found of interest to our readers, who may accept our assurance of its perfect authenticity and truthfulness:
WORCESTER, Mass., March 23, 1884.
Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:
Dear Sir: Until recently I have been for three years a sufferer from Salt Rheum. It followed upon an attack of Erysipelas, for which I was for a long time under medical treatment. I placed myself again in the hands of the physicians who did, I have no doubt, all that could be done. One thing is sure however, I was none the better for all the medicine they gave me. The painful and unsightly disease made continual progress, until I began to fear I should never get rid of it.
By means of one of those accidents that often result in so much blessing I had my attention called to your favorite Remedy, which I was told would surely do me good. I used it, and within a much shorter time than I would have believed possible, I received a permanent cure. I am now perfectly free from Salt Rheum. What a comfort this is, and how it places your wonderful medicine in my opinion, you may guess at, but never know. I keep it now constantly in the house as a family medicine. Yours truly,
MRS. DINAH PHAIR.
Mrs. Phair, some time since, when on a visit Kansas, found a case of Salt Rheum, could not get favorite remedy, sent to New York City for it and cured the case.

Commissioner of Pensions Black has rendered a decision to the effect that a mother can not be allowed a pension as a dependent mother and the accrued pension of her deceased husband for the same period of time. A QUEER OLD MAP.

Peculiar Notions of the Geography of North America.

Among the most recent acquisitions to the collection of ancient and curious works in the legislative library at the Ontario parliament building is an atlas printed in London somewhere just before the beginning of the last century. The title page calls it "A new sett of MAPS both of Ancient and Present GEOGRAPHY, wherein not only the LATITUDE and LONGITUDE of many places are Corrected according to the latest Observations, but also the most remarkable Differences of ANTIENT and PRESENT GEOGRAPHY may be quickly discerned by a bare inspection or comparing of correspondent MAPS; which seems to be the most natural and easy method to lead young students (for whose use the work is principally intended) unto a competent knowledge of the geographical science," by Edward Wells, D. D., sometime student of Christ church, Oxon., and late rector of Cotesbach in Leicestershire. Each of the forty-one maps bears a dedication to "His Highness William Duke of Gloucester, the young son of Princess Anne of Denmark, afterward Queen Anne," who died in the year 1700, and as he was only seventeen years of age at that time the work could only have been prepared a very few years previously. All the maps in the collection are curious, to say the least, but the most peculiar are those relating to America. The map of North America has been laid out according to Mercator's projection, as far as latitude is concerned, but longitudinally this is changed to the regular method, giving the map an even more distorted appearance than it naturally would have with the errors which have been made.

Among the blunders are placing of the eastern extremity, Newfoundland, in the 45th degree of latitude, instead of the 52d degree, and Cape Charles, the eastern point of Labrador, is placed in the same 45th degree, instead of the 56th degree. Iceland is represented as a long, narrow island extending from from the 5th degree to the 21st degree west longitude, instead of from the 15th degree to the 25th degree, but these are comparatively small matters. The extreme eastern point of the continent is at the 45th degree: the western is unknown, but must have extended almost back to Europe, as Cape San Eugenio in Lower California, is given at the 145th degree, or 30 degrees west of its proper location. The source of the Meschasipi or Mississippi River is given in longitude west from Greenwich 125 degrees, so as to throw the western boundary of Ontario from Cape Beale, in Vancouver Island, north, thus taking in nearly half the island. Illinois Lake, or Lake Michigan, is apparently by far the largest of the great lakes, with an extreme breadth of over five hundred miles. Traci or Upper Lake, as Lake Superior is called, is shown as being the same size as Lakes Huron and Erie; and Lake Ontario is given as about one-fourth the size of the latter. Lake Timagaming is shown as the source of the Saguenay and the Rupert Rivers. The Ottawa River on the map receives the waters of Hudson Bay and of Lake Huron to carry to the St. Lawrence, and there was apparently no knowledge of Niagara Falls.

Five towns only appear to have been settled in what is now Canada—Port Royal and Touquemet, the latter now called Yarmouth, in Nova Scotia, then called New Scotland; Brest, at the extreme eastern point of Labrador; Tadousac and Quebec. The errors which are observable in the northern are reproduced in the southern part of the map. Baltimore town is given as being some distance north of Philadelphia, and Plymouth is much nearer to Boston than is Charlestown. The Appalachian mountains run nearly due east and west on the map, through what are now the States of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, thence across the Mississippi, and trending southward into New Mexico. Lower California is an island, and the upper part of the island is called New Albion. New Orleans would appear to have just been founded, as there is an island shown at the mouth of the Mississippi called New French Settlement, but the mouth of the river is no nearer being in its right position than the source, it being shown at the extreme northwestern corner of the "Gulf of Mexico." One more reference to the North may be allowed. "Frobisher's" Straits are given as being south of "Greenland," and James Bay is divided into two parts, one of which is called James and the other Hudson Bay. Carolina is credited with possessing a lake as large as Ontario, and the Susquehanna river is represented as running due north and in an exactly straight line. Many of the towns in Mexico are located tolerably accurately, but the lay of the land is terribly out of proportion. Other maps in the atlas are equally interesting to lovers of the curious, and will well repay a comparison by those who have time and opportunity.—Toronto Globe.

—I asked a physician if there really were any structural difference between the tongue of woman and of man. "Certainly," he replied; "the organ is attached to the floor of the mouth at one extremity, and it is a fact that in the females the controlling muscles are much more pliable than in males. Those muscles which control the acts of taste, prehension, and deglutition are not appreciably diverse in the sexes, but those relating to articulation are enormously developed in woman as compared with man." I told him that he was a real mean old thing, and that I didn't believe a word of it; but, privately, I shouldn't wonder if it were the gospel truth.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—Anciently, in many parts of France, says a writer, when a sale of land took place it was the custom to have twelve adult witnesses, accompanied by twelve little boys, and when the price of the land was paid and its surrender took place, the ears of the boys were pulled and they were severely beaten, so that the pain thus inflicted should leave an impression upon their memory, and, if required afterward, they might bear witness to the sale. Later, when a criminal was being executed, parents whipped their children so that they might take warning by the example and keep in the path of virtue.

—"Here's a musical salesman advertised for. Why don't you apply, Ned?" "I? Why, I'm not musical." "Perhaps not; but I notice that you can blow your own horn, you're familiar with the bars, your remarks are full of slurs, you're always giving notes, and all the rest."—Hotel Gazette.

—Stern parent—"Here, my son, what is this? You were not at school all last week." Astonished boy—"How do you know?" Indignant father—"Your teacher told me so." Wary boy—"Did he see me?" Wrathful papa—"No, not once." Triumphant boy—"Then how does he know I wasn't there?"—Exchange.

—"A scientific Frenchman says he has discovered a process for making artificial brains," said Mrs. Wigglesworth, looking from the paper she was reading. "Artificial brains!" sniffed Mr. Wigglesworth, scornfully; "that's just like those nonsensical Frenchmen—always fooling away their time making something artificial. What I want is real brains—none of your make-believe nonsense." Mrs. Wigglesworth, as she resumed her paper, demurely murmured that she had noticed it, too; but she never should have dared to speak of it herself. And Mr. Wigglesworth rubbed his head in a dazed sort of fashion and wondered if he really had expressed himself just as he meant to.—Rockland Courier-Gazette.

CANINE GHOSTS.

The Literature of the Supernatural Not Confined to Man.

An animal which is often said to make its ghostly appearance is the dog. Thus, a man who hanged himself at Broomfield, near Shrewsbury, "came again in the form of a large black dog," and a headless black dog is reported to haunt the road between Yeaton and Baschurch. A not uncommon belief is that the spirits of wicked persons are punished by being doomed to wear for a certain time the shape of a dog; and according to a Sussex superstition the spirit of a favorite dog which has died returns occasionally to visit its master and the haunts it frequented during life. "I was once informed by a servant," writes Mrs. Latham in her "West Sussex Superstitions," "whom I had desired to go down stairs and try to stop the barking of a dog, which I was afraid would waken a sleeping invalid, that nothing would stop his noise, for she knew quite well by his manner of barking that the ghost of another dog was walking about the garden and terrifying him." Traditions respecting these spectre dogs differ in various localities, but are still firmly credited by our agricultural peasantry. In Devonshire they are known as the "Yeth Hounds," and are said to be the disembodied souls of unbaptized infants. They were heard, we are informed, some few years ago in the Parish of St. Mary Tavy by an old man named Roger Burn. He was working in the fields, when he suddenly heard the baying of the hounds, the shouts and horn of the huntsman, and the smacking of his whip. This last point the old man quoted as at once settling the question: "Now, could I be mistaken? Why, I heard the very smacking of his whip." Once more, some years ago, an accident happened in a Cornish mine, whereby several men lost their lives. As soon as help could be procured, a party descended, but the remains of the poor fellows were discovered to be mutilated beyond recognition. On being brought up to the surface, the clothes and a mass of mangled flesh dropped from the bodies. A bystander, anxious to spare the feelings of the relatives present, quickly cast this unsightly mass into the blazing furnace of an engine close at hand. But ever since that day the engineman positively asserted that troops of little black dogs continually haunted the locality. Wild Edric, a legendary hero, haunts the Stretton Hills in the form of a large black dog with black, fiery eyes.—London Standard.

The English-Egyptian Question.

"Them English are havin' a right smart of a time over there in Africa, ha'n't they?" remarked an old farmer from upin Michigan.

"Yes, indeed."

"I've been a-watchin' of 'em all winter, and d've know what their campaign reminds me of? No? Wall, sir, I used ter have a big Berkshire shoat what had the durndest appetite ever you heerd tell on. The littler shoats had to git out of his way every time I put him in a lot all by hisself, and there was plenty of feed and wallow there for him, more'n he could ever use, but dum me, if he would stay there. Down went that fence and away went that shoat into fields where he had no business to be. Wall, he kept that up all summer, but bimeby he broke into a little patch o' timber an' got to foolin' round. What d've s'pose he stirred up? Wall, by gosh, he run his nose right inter a hornets' nest. It took him a long time to git out o' them woods, but when he got out he was the most subdued shoat you ever seed!"—Chicago Herald.

A PRIVATE LETTER.

Probably no man is better known or more highly respected than Mr. Julian S. Carr, President of the Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co., of Durham, N. C. In every tobacco store in the United States, and in many foreign countries, Blackwell's Durham Tobacco is sold, and it is a well-known fact that the sales of this Company largely exceed those of any other tobacco manufacturer. That such success has been obtained is due to the energy, integrity and ability of Mr. Carr, who has so successfully managed the affairs of the Company. Such a letter as the following, written by Mr. Carr to a personal friend whose only interest in the matter referred to was a desire to do a friendly act, is certainly worthy of careful reading.

Durham, N. C., Feb. 25, 1885.

My Dear "Mac":—I have delayed writing to you, with reference to the Athlophoros remedy, until I could hear from a friend of mine, a gentleman of high character, who used Athlophoros at my suggestion with very great benefit. He is a tobacco manufacturer of high standing. I have waited to hear from him in order that I might use his name officially. I am satisfied, however, that he must be at the New Orleans Exposition, and my letters have failed to reach him. So I will not delay answering your letter longer. You want to know whether Athlophoros is really as good as you thought when you so kindly sent me a couple bottles. I had a sister who was a victim of neuralgia and rheumatism. She suffered intensely, and her condition gave her family and friends much concern. Every known remedy was tried, but without effect. When the bottles you sent me came, I sent one to my sister and one to my sister-in-law. My sister was so encouraged from the use of this one bottle that I put her upon a thorough treatment of Athlophoros. I certainly owe you and Athlophoros a great debt of gratitude for the relief the remedy has given her. She has almost completely recovered from rheumatism, so much so that she has stopped the use of Athlophoros and considers herself well. My sister-in-law, to whom I gave the other bottle, was suffering fearfully with neuralgia, she had become unconscious from the pain—the Athlophoros relieved her entirely. I gave a bottle of Athlophoros to an intimate friend who suffered such intense pain in his head that he looked as if his eyes would start from their sockets, and by its use he has been greatly benefited, and tells me that he received such relief from it that he orders it by the box and keeps it at all times in his house—is never without it—can't afford to be, this is the gentleman to whom I wrote. I wanted to send with this his opinion in his own handwriting, but as I stated he must still be at New Orleans. A very worthy colored man, a house carpenter, Jim Whitted by name, lives in the house adjoining "my man of all work." One morning my man told me that Jim was suffering so intensely from rheumatism that the neighborhood was disturbed day and night by his cries of agony. Wishing to test Athlophoros before my own eyes on a genuine case of acute rheumatism, I wrote the Athlophoros Company stating Jim's condition, and offering, if they would send me the remedy, to see that it had a fair trial in his case. I confess, with all my confidence in Athlophoros, I doubted whether it could help Jim, but it was faithfully tried and I think the proudest man now in all this community is Jim Whitted. He claims to be entirely relieved of all his rheumatism and not only that, but he says the stiffness in his joints, which came with the rheumatism, has all been removed. Within thirty hours after he began to use Athlophoros, he felt like another person. These instances have all come under my personal knowledge. I am very slow to speak of or recommend any medicine, but when a remedy has the virtue and the merit that I believe Athlophoros has, I cannot hesitate to recommend it. I have given you facts—don't they answer your question fully? Yours truly, J. S. CARR.

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall Street, New York.

A Good Breakfast.

Mrs. E. Carpenter, Overlee, Baltimore, county, Maryland, writes: I was greatly benefited by the use of Red Star Cough Cure, when suffering from a severe cold. My cook was seriously ill from a deep-seated cough. She had consulted her doctor without relief. By my advice she used the Cough Cure in connection with an external application of St. Jacobs oil to her side. In one night the change wrought was most gratifying and astonishing. In the morning she was like a new person.

Observe the Birthdays.

Let the birthday of each member of the family be always remembered when it comes. Let there be something a little out of the ordinary routine in the arrangement of the table; cookies fashioned as Johnny likes them best; one of Frank's favorite plum puddings, or Julia's special liking, a loaf of ginger cake; or a wonderful lemon pie, such as only mamma can make.

Then there must be presents. Sometimes people may think they cannot be afforded; but reflect. The little one needs shoes, dresses, aprons and many other things. Purchase one or more for the birthday. It will seem just as much present to the recipients as though they were not obliged to have it.

Next come school-books and story-books, a set of furs or a pair of skates, (should the birthday occur in the winter,) a pretty little dinner-basket, or, if the parents can afford it, a little gold band for one of the white fingers, a necklace, a watch with a shining chain, or the pony that has been wished for so long.

Encourage the little ones in giving to each other, and also remember father and mother's birthday; believe me, it will be bread cast on the waters; the days will only be a few ere some returns, and there will be a never-failing supply of pleasure as long as you and your children live.

Feathered Slaves.

No people are more ingenious than the Chinese in the minor arts of life. That they have succeeded in training birds to fish is a striking example of their ingenuity and patience. Instead of carrying nets, the fishermen provide themselves with a large number of cormorants which perch on the edge of the boats. It is a curious spectacle to see these creatures engaged in fishing, diving into the water and always coming up with a fish in their beaks. As the Chinese fear the vigorous appetites of their feathered servants, they fasten around their necks an iron ring, large enough to allow their breathing but too small to admit of the entrance of the fish they seize; to prevent their straying about in the water and wasting the time desired for their work, a cord is attached to the ring and to one claw of the cormorant by which he is pulled up when inclined to stay too long under water. When tired he is permitted to rest for a while; but if he abuse the indulgence and waste his time, a few strokes of the bamboo recalls him to duty, and the poor diver resumes his laborious occupation. In passing from one fishing ground to another, the cormorants perch side by side, so as not to disturb the equilibrium of the frail vessel.

I have been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years. I could not tell how many different remedies I have tried, and none seemed to reach my case like Ely's Cream Balm. I had lost my smell entirely for the last fifteen years, and I had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were gitting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as fine a needle as I ever did, and my smell is partly restored, and it seems to be improving all the time. I think there is nothing like Ely's Cream Balm for Catarrh. I always had a trouble with my throat and a little hacking cough, and I am almost well of that. Mrs. F. E. ACHES! PAINS!

"I ache all over!" What a common expression; and how much it means to many a poor sufferer! These aches have a cause, and more frequently than is generally suspected, the cause is the Liver or Kidneys. No disease is more painful or serious than these, and no remedy is so prompt and effective as

MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS.

No remedy has yet been discovered that is so effective in all KIDNEY AND LIVER COMPLAINTS, MALARIA, DYSPEPSIA, etc., and yet it is simple and harmless. Science and medical skill have combined with wonderful success those herbs which nature has provided for the cure of disease. It strengthens and invigorates the whole system.

Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, the distinguished Congressman, once wrote to a fellow member who was suffering from indigestion and kidney disease: "Try Mishler's Herb Bitters, I believe it will cure you. I have used it for both indigestion and affection of the kidneys, and it is the most wonderful combination of medicinal herbs I ever saw."

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The husband and son of Mrs. Laura Mellick, of Staten Island, were sent to an insane asylum two years ago. Recently Mrs. Mellick and two other children, son and daughter, were also adjudged insane; and the whole family is now in the retreat.—N. Y. Tribune.

—The professional sword swallower does not pursue his business, as is supposed, with impunity. A sword swallower recently died of hemorrhage in an English hospital, and the medical opinion seems to be that all of these men trifle with and shorten their lives.—N. Y. Herald.

—A young woman in Scotland recently, who had been discarded by one lover, married another one and then brought an action for breach of promise against the first. The magistrate before whom the case was tried refused to grant the request of the young lady for damages.

—Capt. J. G. Bourke, U. S. A., of Gen. Crook's staff, at Whipple barracks, in a letter to a friend in Omaha, says: "I have been very busy preparing a lecture entitled 'With General Crook in the Sierra Madre,' which I inflicted upon the unfortunate people of Prescott the other night. You ought to have heard the snoring. Half the audience was asleep in twenty minutes. When I stated that I would not detain them longer the applause was deafening."

—The largest vacuum-pan ever constructed has been made for a San Francisco refining company. It is a pear-shaped vessel, made from sections of cast iron. It is seventeen feet in diameter inside, reaches a height of over forty feet, and will weigh 140 tons when empty. It will boil 100 tons of sugar at once. It contains sixty coils of four-inch copper pipe, arranged in the form a hollow inverted cone, providing 3,000 square feet of heating surface.

—Two young men of this town were taking a pleasant stroll the other evening. A dog suddenly appeared and came rushing toward them. The cry "mad dog" was uttered by both, and they separated immediately. One scrambled up a tree, and the other stretched his legs, and he has long ones, to reach home. The dog followed in pursuit; the faster the youth ran, the faster came the dog. It was nip and tuck, and the speed of both increased to the utmost. The youth finally reached the front gate, rushed in and closed it. He turned round with a satisfied air, and found that it was his own dog which had been chasing him in sport.—Riversville (Ga.) Gazette.

BURNABY.

How the Distinguished Litterateur Met His Fate at Abu-Klea.

Colonel Burnaby himself, whose every action at the time I saw from a distance of about thirty yards, rode out in front of the rear of the left face, apparently to assist two or three of our skirmishers, who were running in hard pressed. I think all but one man of them succeeded in reaching our lines. Burnaby went forward to the men's assistance sword in hand. He told me he had given to his servant to carry that double-barrelled shot-gun which he had used so well against the Hadendowas at El Teb in deference to the noise made in England by so-called humanitarians against its use. Had it been in his hand Burnaby would easily have saved other lives as well as his own, but they would have been English lives at the expense of Arabs. As the dauntless Colonel rode forward on a borrowed nag—for his own had been shot that morning—he put himself in the way of a sheikh charging down on horseback. Ere the Arab had closed with him a bullet from some one in our ranks, and not Burnaby's sword thrust, brought the sheikh headlong to the ground. The enemy's spearmen were close behind and one of them suddenly dashed at Colonel Burnaby, pointing the long blade of his spear at his throat. Checking his horse and slowly pulling it backward, Burnaby leaned forward in his saddle and parried the Moslem's rapid and ferocious thrusts; but the length of the man's weapon, eight feet, put it out of his power to return with interest the Arab's murderous intent. Once or twice I think the Colonel just touched his man, only to make him more wary and eager. The affray was the work of three or four seconds only, for the savage horde of swarthy negroes from Kordofan, and the straight-haired, tawny-complexioned Arabs of the Bayuda steppe, were fast closing in upon our square. Burnaby fenced smartly, just as if he were playing in an assault at arms, and there was a smile on his features as he drove off the man's awkward points. The scene was taken in at a glance—with that lightning instinct which I have seen the desert warriors before now display in battle while coming to one another's aid—by an Arab, who, pursuing a soldier had passed five paces to Burnaby's right and rear. Turning with a sudden spring, this second Arab ran his spear-point into the Colonel's right shoulder. It was but a slight wound—enough, though, to cause Burnaby to twist around in his saddle to defend himself from this unexpected attack. Before the savage could repeat his unlooked-for blow—so near the ranks of the square was the scene now being enacted—a soldier ran out and drove his sword-bayonet through the second assailant. As the Englishman withdrew the steel, the ferocious Arab wriggled around and sought to reach him. The effort was too much, however, even for his delirium of hatred against the Christian, and the rebel reeled and fell. Brief as was Burnaby's glance backward at this fatal episode, it was long enough to enable the first Arab to deliver his spear-point full in the brave officer's throat. The blow drove Burnaby out of his saddle, but it required a second one before he let go his grip of the reins and tumbled upon the ground. Half a dozen Arabs were now about him. With the blood gushing in streams from his gashed throat the dauntless guardsman leaped to his feet, sword in hand, and slashed at the ferocious group. They were the wild strokes of a proud, brave man dying hard, and he was quickly overborne and left helpless and dying. The heroic soldier who sprang to his rescue was, I fear, also slain in the melee, for—though I watched for him—I never saw him get back to his place in the ranks.—Cor. London Telegraph.

POISON AT THE FRONT DOOR.

No article entering so generally into the food of every family has been found more villanously adulterated than baking powder. For the purpose of underselling those powders of absolute purity and wholesomeness which are alone safe for use in food, hundreds of dealers are putting up baking powders with cheap and adulterated cream of tartar, which contains lime, earth, etc., adding strength by the free use of alum.

These adulterated powders are shoved upon the public with the greatest persistency. They are first given away—left in samples at private residences, with circulars containing bogus analyses and certificates and false representations as to their value, etc. This fact of itself is sufficient to condemn them. A first class article will sell on its merits. No manufacturer whose goods are of value can afford to give them away, and none but the cheapest make and most inferior and unmarketable goods require to be distributed free in order to get the public to use them, and this method is adopted only by parties who have failed to dispose of their wares through the ordinary and legitimate channels of trade.

Free samples of articles of food left at the house should be regarded with suspicion. There is no guarantee of their wholesomeness, while there is real danger that they contain a fatally poisonous compound. Many instances of poisoning from the use of such samples are recorded.

The only safe way is to consign all such samples immediately to the ash barrel, and to turn a deaf ear to the statements made by their venders. It is not worth while to trifle with life and health to the extent of testing every doubtful package of baking powder that comes along. Better to rely on an old and reliable brand, like the Royal, which has by a quarter of a century's constant use proved its perfect worth and efficiency, or some other brand that is not so worthless and cheap that its proprietors can afford to give it away by the cart load. It is in its favor that the Royal Baking Powder is never given away, sold by means of lotteries, nor accompanied by chromos, spoons, crockery, or other gifts, except the gifts of absolute purity, wholesomeness, full weight, and superlative leavening power. Its own merits have been its chief advertisement, and they have secured for it the constant patronage of American people to an extent beyond the combined sale of all other baking powders. The Royal Baking Powder is certified by all Government chemists as absolutely pure and perfect.

OBITUARY.

The deceased was a pioneer of that town and made his home there during almost his entire life, except for 28 years when he was a resident of Michigan. He came to this state in the year 1829 and settled on the farm in the old township of Tecumseh now owned by F. C. Rector, where he continued to reside during his residence in this state. He was an energetic upright man and became quite prominent as a local political leader, having held the office of supervisor, township clerk and also county clerk. He was for about one year the lessee of the Brownville mill property in this village and during his occupancy the mill was destroyed by fire. He lost quite heavily by this calamity and soon thereafter, in 1867, he returned to his old home in the State of New York, to pass his declining years. He was a man of great activity and industry and enjoyed excellent physical health, and his death was occasioned by a paralytic shock, which terminated his life in a few hours. One daughter married Mr. Carol Roberts of Franklin, whose sudden death by accident only a few months ago, is still fresh in the minds of all. Two sons and one daughter still survive him. Many old residents of Tecumseh, who knew him well, will learn of his demise with sincere regret.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

George Freese came to Clinton last Friday and returned to Detroit Saturday. He has left the employ of J. K. Burnham & Co.

Sam Larzelere has sold his farm two miles west of here to A. P. Halladay. He will live in Mrs. William Larzelere's house.

Mrs. Alonzo Mills was poisoned a few days ago by handling sumach. Her hands and arms were in a very bad condition for several days, but she is at present improving.

Mrs. Florence Conklin has rented Solomon Brown's house, at present occupied by August Liebelt. She will move her household goods there in a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Whittelsey, of Ypsilanti, were expected here last week, but word was received that they were both sick and unable to come. Mrs. E. W. Freese left here Saturday afternoon for Ypsilanti.

Alonzo Clark has sold the farm where Frank DeRyke has lived for several years, to James Hogan. Mr. DeRyke has moved his family to Missouri.

Mr. Otho Heywood was in town Tuesday morning and billed the place for the entertainment to be given by his brother, Alba Heywood, Monday evening, April 13th. An entire new program will be presented, and all those who had the pleasure of listening to him when he was here a few weeks ago, will doubtless avail themselves of this opportunity of hearing him again. The admission fee is 15 cents. Children 10 cents.

Dr. Cameron has changed his place of residence from Mrs. H. Lancaster's house on Franklin street, to rooms in the east part of the house owned by Mrs. Morehouse.

Dan Davis has moved his stock of confectionery to the post-office building. We hear that he intends using the rooms above for ice cream parlors.

Mr. and Mrs. Mather, of Tecumseh, were in town last Monday to attend the funeral of Charles Brooks.

Charlie Clark had the misfortune to cut his left arm quite badly last week, while trimming fruit trees. He was able to commence work Monday.

Miss Mable Guiwits, of Tecumseh, has been visiting Mrs. Mary Guiwits this week.

Mrs. Charles Waldo is visiting at her sister's, Mrs. John Hause.

At the town election last Monday, the candidates on the democratic ticket were elected, with the exception of Supervisor and township treasurer. The ticket elected was as follows:

Supervisor—S. F. Marstellar.
Township Clerk—Charles Nase.
Treasurer—Robert Redick.
Highwa Com.—Sylvanus Howell.
Justice, full term—Danforth Keyes.
Justice, vacancy—W. B. Keyser.
School Inspector—John McAdam.
Constables—Joseph C. Burroughs, A. W. Muir, W. H. Smith, L. C. Gragg.

August Liebelt has rented Miss Grace Baldwin's house on Chicago street, and will move there shortly.

Crowell Eddy expects to start Thursday for Vinton, Iowa, to visit his sons at that place.

News was received here last Saturday morning that Mr. Charles Brooks who has been sick for several weeks at Albion, was dead, and his remains would be brought home for burial. The news of his death was quite sudden, although not altogether unexpected. His brother-in-law, Mr. Ed. Larzelere was here from Albion last Friday, making arrangements for the house being opened, intending to bring him home as soon as the weather permitted. He reached home only a few hours before Mr. Brooks died. The funeral services were held at the house, Rev. Mr. Kerridge officiating. His remarks were brief, but each word was spoken as though prompted by a heart full of sympathy for the afflicted, and in a plain non-flowery manner, brought comfort to the hearts aching with their burden of grief. Mr. Brooks was an old resident here, and until within a few years took an active interest in all business affairs of the village. Mrs. Brooks has the sincere sympathy of many friends in her sore affliction.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Easter; checks of another time circle and the usual floral tributes have made churches bowers of prayer. The display was unusualy good, many Callas being found at Mrs. Holden's conservatory that have been coaxed into late bloom by good care. Previous to sacred festival came a roller skate race of twenty miles for a divided purse of five dollars. The winners were Theron Philips and George Morrison. The latter achieved fame, but returned home like Mr. Gumbo, excepting the slight difference of shutter. His tripping up dismantled his pantaloons considerably, and the red, white and blue corsage that was perfection without a train to it, got splitted so much it facilitated his getting out of it, and he crept up stairs to bed with a face purpled by over exertion, and eyes swelled to a size that must have made his guardian angel think himself stationed by the wrong pillow. A ten hour sleep recuperated his head enough to ache, but those lovely pantalettes are ruined forever, and he says another such excursion will make him immortal. In case that happens I have promised to write his epitaph. It will begin like this: My friends! I have rolled from sin, have been jerked because the crowd hollered I got so betwirked, that I wheeled, whirled and lie a betwaddled sacrify. It will be real effecting when finished; and devotees of the rink will not fail to appreciate the spirit of self-sacrifice that impeled him to keep up ring-round-rosying 'till his constitution, free moral agency and the Lord's patience, gave out simultaneously. He may not need it unless he enters the charmed circle next month when prizes will be given for skating up a string and dropping through a barrel at the top end; but its a kind of poetry that can be twisted to fit circumstances and will do for those Solomons who have guided women in the path of wisdom until they have become experts in the art of raking chestnuts with other hands than their own. Pulpit and press give an occasional sigh about calico frivolity and inconstancy, but if nature is true to her laws they can both begin their term of wailing soon. Women are easily induced by their friends (or rather those they believe to be) to aid in money getting: often by questionable schemes of which they are ignorant, but enlightenment follows sooner or later and does not increase respect for their teachers. The cunning that corrupts us first in order to make us useful afterwards, reacts on itself and undermines home. Ignorance cannot be depended on to blossom out innocence, and power given to ensnare others, is liable to be abused. For the past ten years there has been no lack of dilligence in converting woman's ignorance into a vantage basis, for the unscrupulous, and that success crowns the work, will be demonstrated by the ancient rule of whosoever diggeth a pit shall fall therein.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

James Lane and wife returned from Florida last Wednesday night. They give a very favorable report concerning the climate and James evidently thinks there is a chance to make a little filthy lucre in those parts as he has made several investments there, expects to return sometime in the future to look after his interests. We understand that he built a house, cleared off some land and set out an orange grove down about Sorrento where they first landed, after which they came back north about one hundred miles to Kerr City to visit Mr. Swan's people, and were so well pleased with the location that they staid there the remainder of the winter, buying land there also on which he expects to build, as he has got his lumber sawed and on the ground to season. Well, James we wish you success in your enterprise, but don't just like the idea of losing an old neighbor who has been in the habit of behaving himself.

Ezra Hoxsie returned from Florida Saturday night and judging from his looks we should say that oranges as a steady diet agrees with him pretty well. We have not had much conversation with him, but we are of the opinion that he was not very favorably impressed with the country.

Town meeting passed off pleasantly as usual, although everybody appeared to have blood in their eye. The Republicans lugged off nearly every thing which causes them to rejoice exceedingly. Say boys, remember the word, "Rejoice not in the downfall of thine enemy."

Mrs. Mary Jane Satterthwaite is very sick and of late but little hopes have been entertained of her recovery. She is reported to-day as being more comfortable, and is thought to be a little better.

Mrs. Earl started again Monday morning for a trip through the state in the interest of the corset factory, she being general agent for Michigan.

The boys around here are making it hot for the ducks and fish on the prairie. We used to think that we liked fish, but don't care to get our boots quite as full of water as the boys do who go, and then to think of one having to hang his suspenders on the back of a chair next to the stove all night robs it of all its romance.

Town meeting passed off quietly, but when the votes were counted it was discovered that the slip peddler had got in plenty of work.

Wilson Lee has taken his son, W. Bliss Lee into partnership, and the new firm, Lee & Son, have added a fine stock of groceries to their stock of boots and shoes.

Levant Charles and Clifford Marsh are putting up a building 20x40. They intend to put in a stock of hardware as soon as they complete it. Onsted is bound to grow even if it is hard times.

Mr. Jesse Russell died last Friday morning after a long illness. The funeral was held Sunday at 11 o'clock. Mr. Russell was the oldest man in the township, being 88 years of age.

Mrs. Feller, who lived with her son William near Springville, died Tuesday morning. The funeral was held at the Springville church Wednesday.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Our village is affected by sickness to an unusual degree this spring.

A son of Elder Bailey, of Rollin, is installed behind the counter at Smiley's hardware store.

L. H. Bedell, of Devils Lake is introducing his cancer remedy here.

About 50 of our citizens contributed 50c each for the privilege of drawing for a $25 suit of clothes at Hirshman's clothing store last Tuesday. The prize fell to Mr. W. A. Wilcox, and he now rates as the luckiest man in town.

A team belonging to A. J. Kempton ran away with Mr. Marvin Smith and wife in Cambridge last Sunday, causing a total wreck of the vehicle and injuring the occupants quite severely. Bad roads caused the buggy to overturn which frightened the team.

Town meeting passed off very quietly Monday with three tickets in the field, viz: Democrats, Prohibition and Republican. The "Demmies" captured all the officers except one justice.

SPRINGVILLE SIFTINGS.

It has now the appearance that spring has come.

On Sunday last the Methodist Sunday school came to order with Alba Case, superintendent; Julius Vaughn, assistant; Mrs. I. Vaughan, secretary; R. L. Rogers, treasurer. A good attendance.

Morse received 127 votes and Cooley 80, on the state ticket last Monday.

Last week Miss Mary Booher returned after a long visit with her relatives in Hillsdale and Washtenaw County.

At the Lake mills we had quite a scare on account of a leak in the dam but it was repaired after a delay of a day, and is now in operation.

Since the snow has disappeared the wheat on the ground makes a splendid show and bids fair for a bountiful crop. The farmers will have plenty of work, being about a month behind, but with good weather will soon catch up.

Springville school commenced last Monday with Miss Helen Queale as teacher.

The skating rink was open town meeting day and evening. They had a big crowd and closed with a dance. Open again Wednesday evening next.

DROWNED IN THE RAISIN.

Last Sunday afternoon three lads, Burt Barnes, Charles Epke and Louis Wacker, with some other persons, strolled out to the river to enjoy themselves in the pleasant afternoon air. They were in the vicinity of the white mill dam, where an old boat was discovered by three boys, who climbed into it. It had neither oars nor paddle and the boys propelled it with their hands, finally getting near enough to the falls of the dam to come under the influence of the current. One of the boys Charlie Epke, discovering the situation, sprang out and waded ashore, the water not being deep. The other two resolved to take their chances, and together went over the dam with the boat. The latter as it swept over the fall came under the action of the water, and swinging around crosswise was held in that position and filling with water tipped over, throwing out the young occupants. Both started to swim ashore, which young Barnes reached in safety. Louis Wacker, however, probably desiring to save the boat from floating off turned about and swam toward it, but soon went down. Charles Chapman, one of the young men present, seeing this, started after him, but the lad was swept onward and arose a considerable distance below Chapman. The boy soon disappeared, and all efforts to save him proved of no avail. Efforts to discover the unfortunate boy were alike futile. A crowd soon gathered, and vigorous search was begun, but the body has not yet been recovered.—Adrian Record.

Here is a mathematical problem for the boys. The town meeting voted to raise $100 as a bounty fund for woodchuck scalps. How many scalps will this sum pay for at fifteen cents each?

"THERE SHE BLOWS!"

An Old Sailor's Story of Life on Board a Whaler.

Not All That Fancy Paints It—His Advice to Young Men Going a Whaling Is Embraced in the Word Don't.

"One of the Detroit dailies recently contained an interview with a gentleman who once made a two-years' cruise in a whaling vessel, and I read it with peculiar interest, for it recalled incidents connected with my youth that I can never forget," remarked a Chebacco resident of this city yesterday.

"From it the general reader would obtain a sort of an idea of what life on board a 'Blubber Hunter' is, but only enough to excite curiosity, and possibly a yearning for more of the same kind of information. His experience was gained fifteen or twenty years subsequent to mine, and possibly the practices and usages on shipboard were changed somewhat during that period. Certain it is that my experience differed materially from his, and was not such as to incline one to try a second voyage.

"When I made a fool of myself and went to sea (see a whale and other things too numerous to mention) the whaling business was at its best, and the system of bounties, that he speaks about, were not in vogue. Officers and men had a certain 'lay' or share of the oil taken, although it was the custom then to offer to fit out men on the 'strength' or success of the voyage. If the voyage turned out badly, and the men were in debt to the ship at its close, that was the owner's loss.

"There may be some young men who read the Free Press, who have become fired with a desire to go to sea. What I shall say to you is spoken with a desire to deter them from taking such an ill-advised step. A sailor's life, and especially a sailor's life on a whaler, is one I should never encourage any young man to follow. Not but the life and calling of a sailor is a noble one when entered upon and pursued by anyone having a natural taste and inclination in that direction, coupled with a desire and determination to make it a life business and to achieve success in its pursuit. But to go to sea, as thousands do, merely to gratify an idle curiosity or whim, or to get away from the restraints of home, is the worst step any boy can take, and he finds it out to his sorrow very quickly, but, alas! too late. I speak from experience, for I have sailed many voyages, and the last one was on a whaler. That cured me.

"In fitting out a whaler, the number of men shipped depends upon the number of boats carried, and this, in turn, depends upon the tonnage of the ship. A small brig or bark never carries more than three boats, and these are the class of vessels that used to cruise in the South Atlantic for sperm whales. Larger vessels, those that used to go around Cape Horn to cruise in the Pacific, never carried less than four boats, and were fitted out for sperm and right whaling. These whalers were fitted out for a cruise of four or five years, the boats were twenty-six to twenty-eight feet in length, with oars from fifteen to seventeen feet long, and each boat carried about 350 fathoms of line coiled in two tubs. The South Atlantic whalers were fitted out for shorter cruises.

"A boat's crew comprised an officer (the Captain or one of the mates), who was called the header; a boat steerer, who was also the harpooner, and four sailors, six in all. The boatsteerer always pulled an oar until the boat was near the whale, when he exchanged it for a harpoon and stood ready to dart it into the whale.

"It was usually the custom to ship all the green hands possible for the reason that they could be hired cheaper than experienced men, and often at the commencement of a voyage it was found that the ship in rough and stormy weather was poorly provided with men capable of making and taking in sail, or assisting in properly caring for the safety of the vessel. The green hands were at first almost useless, and until they had learned to steer, and how to get up aloft in rough weather and handle themselves after they got there, the labor of working the ship fell upon a few old sailors and the boatsteerers, even the officers sometimes being forced to do men's duty.

"As soon as the vessel was fairly out to sea, however, the green hands were put through a course of training which quickly made them wish they had stayed at home. They were sent aloft to look out for whales, and as soon as a school of blackfish were sighted, all the boats were lowered, the green men manned the oars, and away went the boats in a race to see which would strike the first fish. Of course this would blister the men's hands, but they learned how to handle an oar, and themselves in a boat, so that by the time they reached the whaling grounds, they were able to do good service, and knew what was expected of them. These blackfish yield a inferior quality of oil, but it is used for lighting purposes on board of ship. They also learned to box the compass and steer. Each boat carried a mast and sail, but these were only set when, after a whale had been killed, they were sailing back to the ship to tow it alongside.

"As soon as a whale was found the whaling ground for days and weeks at a time was always another sight, and moving back and forth about four or five miles per hour, and always bearing to windward, tacking every few hours, thus covering, as it were, the ground all over. Unless successful in finding and killing whales, all sail would be set, and away we went for some other cruising ground.

"As soon as a whale is struck sharks appear in great numbers, and they never leave the whale for an instant until it is towed along side, stripped of its blubber and cast adrift, then they go with the carcass. These sharks are big fellows and very ravenous. When the whale is secured to the ship some one must go over upon him and open the blubber and hitch a tackle-block thereto. This is such dangerous business that the boatsteerers take turns at it. They would be snapped up by the sharks in a minute but for two men who protect them with long-handled spades that were ground as sharp as a razor and were used to cut blubber. If a shark got too close to the boatsteerer, one of these men would jab a spade into him with all his might and he would make off in a hurry.

"During the trying-out process all hands were on duty, during the day until six p. m., at which time half of the crew went below, but relieved the other watch at midnight, and all went on duty again at six a. m. In other words, six hours out of the twenty-four was all the rest any man of us could get. Vessels that went around Cape Horn, or Cape Horners as they were called, making voyages of four or five years, necessarily carried more men to man their boats; and had so many men on board that even while trying out oil one-half of the crew could do all the work, so as soon as a whale was secured to the ship they used to set regular watches, four hours on and four hours off, day and night.

"The time usually required to secure a whale, strip off the blubber, try it out, store the oil and clean the ship was about a week. The first fire under the try-kettles was started with wood, but it was thereafter fed with what are called 'scraps'—the refuse of the blubber after it has passed through the trying-out process. Of this trying-out process I can give you no more accurate idea than by quoting from J. Ross Browne's 'History of the Whale Fisheries.' He says:

"'I know of nothing to which this part of the whaling business can be more appropriately compared than Dante's picture of the infernal regions. It requires but little stretch of the imagination to suppose the smoke, the hissing boilers, the savage-looking crew, and the waves of flame that burst now and then from the flues of the furnace, a part of the paraphernalia of a scene in the lower regions. Our down-easter, who always had something characteristic to say of everything, very sagely remarked on one occasion when nearly suffocated with smoke: 'If this isn't hell on a small scale I don't know what to call it!'

"'Of a full-grown sperm whale of the largest size, or about eighty-four feet in length, the dimensions may be given as follows: Depth of the head, eight or nine feet; breadth of the head, five to six feet. The depth of the body seldom exceeds twelve or fourteen feet, so that the circumference of the largest sperm whale will seldom exceed thirty-six feet. The sperm whale has forty-two teeth in the lower jaw, but there are none in the upper, which instead presents depressions corresponding to and for the reception of the points of those in the lower jaw.'

"Of the amount of oil a sperm whale will yield, I can only say that I helped capture and cut-in one of them that measured about sixty feet in length, that gave us over one hundred barrels of oil. It has often been said that more whales can be taken on Sunday than on any other day, but, strange though it may seem, some captains that I have known would not lower a boat for them on that day.

"Although I have, as a sailor before the mast, been around Cape Horn and the Cape of Good Hope, yet my voyage in a whaler was to the South Atlantic, on which cruise we touched at Fayal, Pernambuco, St. Helena, Tristan d'Acunha and other Islands in the Southern seas. That voyage was my last. I never was 'cut out for a sailor,' and I found it out very soon, but was not willing to acknowledge it until I had 'seen the elephant,' which I did, together with a large part of the tail.

"Immediately upon a whale being harpooned, he sounds, that is, goes under water at lightning speed, as does also the line to which he is attached, making it necessary to throw water upon it to prevent it from taking fire from the friction. It has been claimed that a whale can run at a speed of a mile a minute. They can not remain long below but must come up to breathe. When a whale is struck, the boatsteerer is relieved by the header, and he mans the steering oar until the whale turns up, when a whale does his belly turns uppermost. Then the boats are all fastened together, the sails hoisted and then commences a long, tedious pull. You might think they would try and let the whale come up. The whale does come up as fast as I can, but it goes to windward and drags the boat as fully away from the ship when a prize is captured. Not infrequently darkness overtakes them a long way from their ship.

"While cruising off the coast of Brazil we fell in one day with a New London whaler, a Cape Hopner, homeward bound. She had, inside, our three or four years, and neighborly call was exchanged between the whaling grounds of that section. We spoke her twice and crammed with her. What does crammed mean? Visited. One of her crew was a good fellow-townsman, and schoolmate of mine who had left home two or three years before I did on this voyage. He was the only man I ever met at sea or abroad anywhere that I knew or saw before.

"Now, in conclusion I want to say to every young lad who reads the Free Press, that if he wishes to see the world, or has any inclination to go to sea, take my advice. Go to work on land and earn money enough to gratify your desire to travel. Then you can satisfy your curiosity without undergoing the privations that one must meet who goes as I did and hundreds of others have done, and come back to tell and record such experiences as they never would have passed through had they had the slightest idea of what was before them."—Detroit Free Press.

RECKONING TIME.

The Methods of Marking the Passage of Time by Various Peoples.

Among many peoples the modes of reckoning time do not deserve the name of system. The Otaheitans used the changes of the moon and the growth of the bread fruit; the Makha Indians on Cape Flattery the moon and the seasons, of which latter they distinguished two, the cold and the warm. The Muysca Indians, according to Humboldt, had 37 lunar months in their cycle, and 20 of these cycles formed a larger one. Where there were no religious festivals connected with the new or the full moon, people gave up the luni-solar year altogether and adopted the solar year only, confining themselves to bringing day and night into connection with it as far as possible, and paying no regard to the moon's course. It was soon found that the Solar year was approximately 365 days in length, and this we find first in the year of the ancient Egyptians. They divided their solar year of 365 days into 12 months, each of 30 days, to which they added 5 supplementary days. The years were counted according to the reigns, and the Canon of Ptolemy is a chronological table giving the commencing years of the various kings. The same form of year is found among the Persians, with the difference that the supplementary days are added to the eighth and not to the twelfth month. Their months had names, not numbers, and their years were reckoned from the accession of Sezdegird, an era from which the Persians, especially in some parts of India, still count their years. It is remarkable that so inexact a year, originating so long ago, should have existed through centuries down to our own day, although its incorrectness was early recognized. The Egyptians, for whom the time of the rising of the Nile, at the ascent of Sirius, was of great importance, noticed soon the occurrence came later and later in their year, on New Year's Day four years later it was the second day, eight years the third, and so on. On this they based the Sothis, or Dog-star period of 1,461 Egyptian years, in the course of which Sirius rose successively on every day of the year. Then came the knowledge of the year of 365¼ days, which is tolerably exact, and of this there are several forms of years. In Egypt the change to the more exact reckoning was accomplished in a simple way.—Christian at Work.

TWASN'T HERE.

The Sad-Eyed Stranger Who Was Looking for a Mate.

He stood with back to the railing on the ferry dock, bribing the sun to shine down on his rheumatic points, when a second man came strolling up, and they saluted:

"Howdy, Captain?"

"Howdy, Captain?"

They had scarcely started conversation when the third man appeared, and this time it was:

"Morning, Captain."

"Morning, Captain."

"Captains White and Smith, good morning to you."

In the course of three or four minutes a man walked out of a saloon a hundred feet away, and as he came sauntering down it was:

"Ah—ha! Captain!"

"Hello! Captain!"

"Ah! Captain, glad to see you!"

"Captains Smith, White and Green, good morning."

The same programme was continued until seven "Captains" stood rubbing their backs on the railing. A stranger who had observed the various meetings and heard each man addressed by his title suddenly began looking around and making inquiries for the Harbor-Master's grappling-hooks.

"What's up? What dy'e want of the grapplers?" asked one.

"I want to recover the body of the poor fellow."

"Who?"

"Why, being you are all Captains it is likely the mate fell off the deck before any of you got here. I'm going to find one somewhere, even if at the bottom of the river!"

They all looked at him for a dreadfully long time without as much as winking, and when he moved away not a man of them betrayed himself, although there was only one man in the lot entitled to be called Captain.—Detroit Free Press.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

TRUTHFUL WILLIAM.

Mr. Nye Becomes Interested in Agriculture and Detaileth the Result of His Experiments.

During the past season I have been considerably interested in agriculture. I have met with some success, but not enough to madden me with joy. It takes a good deal of success to unscrew my reason and make it totter on its throne. I've had trouble with my liver, and various other abnormal conditions of the vital organs, but old reason sits there on his throne, as the case may be, through it all.

Agriculture has a charm about it which I can not adequately describe. Every product of the farm is furnished by nature with something that loves it, so that it will never be neglected. The grain crop is loved by the weevil, the Hessian fly and the chinch bug; the watermelon, the squash and the cucumber are loved by the squash bug; the potato is loved by the potato bug; the sweet corn is loved by the ant, the sluggard; the tomato is loved by the cut-worm; the plum is loved by the curculio, and so forth, and so forth, so that no plant that grows need be a wall-flower. [Early bloom up and extremely dwarf joke for the table. Plant as soon as there is no danger of frosts, in drills four inches apart. When ripe, pull it, and eat raw with vinegar. The red ants may be added to taste.]

Well, I began early to spade up my angle worms and other pets, to see if they had withstood the severe winter. I found they had. They were unusually bright and cheerful. The potato bugs were a little sluggish at first, but as the spring opened and the ground warmed up they pitched right in, and did first rate. Every one of my bugs in May looked splendidly. I was most worried about my cut-worms. Away along in April I had not seen a cut-worm, and I began to fear they had suffered, and perhaps perished in the extreme cold of the previous winter.

One morning late in the month, however, I saw a cut-worm come out from behind a cabbage stump and take off his ear muff. He was a little stiff in the joints, but we had not lost hope. I saw at once that now was the time to assist him if I had a spark of humanity left. I searched every work I could find on agriculture to find what it was that farmer fed their blanded cut-worms, but all scientists seemed to be silent. I read the agricultural reports, the dictionary, and the encyclopædia, but they didn't throw any light on the subject. I got wild. I feared that I had brought but one cut-worm through the winter, and I was liable to lose him unless I could find out what to feed him. I asked some of my neighbors, but they spoke jeeringly and sarcastically. I know now why it was. All their cut-worms had frozen down last winter, and they couldn't bear to see me get ahead.

All at once, an idea struck me. I haven't recovered from the concussion yet. It was this: the worm had wintered under a cabbage stalk; no doubt he was fond of the beverage. I acted upon this thought and bought him two dozen red cabbage plants, at fifty cents a dozen. I had hit it the first pop. He was passionately fond of the cabbage plants, and would eat three in one night. He also had several matinees and sour krout lawn fest balls for his friends, and in a week I bought three dozen more cabbage plants. By this time I had collected a large group of common scrub cut-worms, early Swedish cut-worms, dwarf Hubbard cut-worms and short-horn cut-worms, all doing well, but still, I thought, a little side-bound and bilious. They acted languid and listless. As my squash bugs, currant worms, potato bugs, etc., were all doing well without care, I devoted myself almost exclusively to my cut-worms. They were all strong and well, but they seemed melancholy with nothing to eat, day after day, but cabbages.

I therefore bought five dozen tomato plants that were tender and large. These I fed to the cut-worms at the rate of eight to ten in one night. In a week the cut-worms had thrown off that air of ennui and languor that I had formerly noticed, and were gay and light-hearted. I got them some more tomato plants, and then some more cabbage for change. On the whole I was as proud as any young farmer could be who has made a success of anything.

One morning I noticed that a cabbage plant was left standing unchanged. The next day it was still there. I was thunderstruck. I dug in the ground. My cut-worms were gone. I spaded up the whole patch, but their wasn't one. Just as I had become attached to them, and they had learned to look forward each day to my coming, when they would almost come up and eat a tomato-plant out of my hand, some one had robbed me of them. I was almost wild with despair and grief. Suddenly something tumbled over my foot. It was mostly stomach, but it had feet on each corner. A neighbor said it was a warty toad. He had eaten up my summer's work! He had swallowed my cutting little cut worms. I tell you, gentle reader, unless some way is provided, whereby this warty scourge can be wiped out, I for one shall relinquish the joys of agricultural pursuits. When a common toad, with a sallow complexion and no intellect, can swallow up my summer's work, it is time to pause.—Northwestern Miller.

He went on foot through Bulgaria and Greece, traversed the Libyan desert on camelback, rode through Persia from Teheran to Bushire on an Arab horse, and journeyed through India on an elephant. He has been the guest of Rajahs and shared the hospitality of Bedouins, and writes graphically of his romantic experiences.—Cincinnati Times.

To Get Rid of Misery.

What is the use of suffering from dyspepsia, nervous prostration or debility, when Brown's Iron Bitters will tone you up and cast these horrors out? There is joy in every bottle of this valuable tonic. It makes bad blood good, and bids dismal people be cheerful. It brings good cheer to the dinner table, and makes the family happy. It drives away the blews, and helps you to enjoy a hearty laugh. And all the respectable druggists keep it.

The Curfew Bell.

It will be remembered that the curfew is commonly said to have been introduced into England by William the Conqueror. By that monarch it was ordained, under severe penalties, that when the curfew bell rang at 8 o'clock in the evening all lights and fires should be extinguished. There are those who hold that this was merely the enforcing of an existing and very common police regulation to that effect. The absolute prohibition of lights after the ringing of the curfew bell was abolished by Henry I. in the year 1100, but the practice of tolling a bell at a fixed hour in the evening was continued, and this, which is still extant in some places, is a survival of the curfew of medieval times. At first the common hour was 7 o'clock, then it was gradually advanced to 8, and in some places to 9 o'clock; indeed, in Scotland, 10 o'clock was not an unusual hour. The curfew was a regulation most useful in those early days, when it was the custom to place the fire in a hole in the middle of the floor under an opening in the roof, to allow the escape of the smoke. When the family retired for the night, the fire was extinguished by covering it up; hence the term couvrefeu, or curfew. The regulation was also serviceable in obliging the people to keep in their houses, and thus preventing night brawls in the streets. It is believed that there is no historical authority for the popular tradition that the severity exhibited by the Conqueror in enforcing obedience to the curfew was more particularly designed to prevent the English from assembling in secret to plan schemes of rebellion against their Norman lords.

Roman Remains in London.

Modern London is built on the debris of the London of the times of Julius Cæsar and Agricola, and it is by no means infrequently that 1800-year old relics of the Roman town are found many feet below the surface of the existing streets. There was a rich find recently in the vicinity of Warwick Square at the depth of nineteen feet. The most interesting relic that came to light was hitherto unknown coin, of the the year 50, which lay alongside of about a dozen urns containing the products of cremation. Just think of the pangs which dying would have afflicted on those ancients if they had known that their ashes would have been seen and handled by an unknown race eighteen centuries and a half, nearly, after their demise! The most aristocratic urn was of glass and fifteen inches high. Well executed leaden pots inclosed several of these depositories, and roofing tiles the rest. The use of lead, as well as of tin, by the way, has great antiquity in Britain. Herodotus speaks of the production of tin there. Emblems of more or less significance touching the future state appeared on some of the receptacles. Along with the coin of the year 50 were others of dates between 46 and 300. But the Romans left something besides these useless things to be remembered by. They introduced into Great Britain its chestnut, walnut, peach, pear and cherry trees.

Is so vastly superior to any other sarsaparilla or blood purifier, that one has well said: "Its health-giving effects upon the blood and entire human organism, are as much more positive than the remedies of a quarter of a century ago, as the steam-power of to-day is in advance of the slow and laborious drudgery of years ago."

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain: it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. THE RESULT IN THE STATE.

The election returns from the state at large show that the fusion state ticket has been elected by a heavy majority, Major Morse leading the ticket for Supreme Court Judge. The fusion candidates for regent will not have as large a majority but enough for all practical purposes.

Morse's majority will probably reach 30,000 and may exceed that figure, while the majority for regents will be about 5,000 less.

The result in the city of Adrian is mixed. The democrats elect Dr. Kimbal mayor, and of the remaining six city officers each party elects three. The aldermen and supervisors are equally divided.

ELECTION NOTES.

The old saying that a fine election day is favorable to the republicans did'nt prove true this year.

Death of Judge Wells of Kalamazoo.

A correspondent of the Detroit Free Press under date of April 4th, gives a long and interesting notice of the death of H. G. Wells of Kalamazoo, on Saturday last at 11:15 A. M. He became a resident of Kalamazoo county in 1833; was elected from that county a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1835, called to form the first State Constitution of Michigan. He was the youngest member of that body, and John J. Adam, one of the delegates from Lenawee county, being the next youngest, he and Mr. Wells formed a more than usual attachment to each other. Mr. Wells was also a member of the Convention of 1850, which formed the State Constitution under which as amended we are now living. He held sundry other offices and appointments, and was offered many others which he declined to accept. In June 1874, he was appointed by Gen. Grant as Presiding Judge of the Court of Alabama Claims, which position he filled with great credit for two and a half years, when its business was wound up. When the Court was reopened a few years ago, Mr. Wells was appointed President of the Court, and served faithfully until failing health obliged him to decline, and return to his home in Kalamazoo. In June 1884, Mr. J. J. Adam of this village received a letter from Mr. Wells, of which we have been furnished the subjoined copy:

KALAMAZOO, June 20th, 1884.

DEAR SIR:—I received your kind letter of June 18th, inst. It found me here sick with inflammatory rheumatism. I came from Washington last week and was sorely tried with the long ride without sleep. I have rallied some, gaining a little strength each day. The doctor and my friends encourage me with the hope that I shall be out again on the street in the course of a short season. I have not heard recently from any of the members of the "Convention of 1835." Nothing would give me more pleasure than to meet you again, but if this is to be denied us I hope to hear from you repeatedly. If your convenience will permit you to write I promise you always a prompt answer.

This letter is written by an amanuensis because my right hand is crippled with the rheumatism; the signature is my own.

Very Respectfully Your Friend.
H. G. WELLS.

AN IMPORTANT FOOD REFORM.

Production of Chemically Pure Cream of Tartar—Total Elimination of all Lime Impurities—New Discoveries in Refining—A Long Stride Toward Pure Food.

(From the New York Tribune.)

Discoveries of much importance on account of the relation they bear toward a more wholesome food supply and consequently upon the public health, have been recently made in the process of refining cream of tartar. Cream of tartar, as is well known, is a bitartrate of potassa purified from the crude tartar, or argol, which collects in a crystalline deposit upon the bottom and sides of wine casks during the fermentation of the wine. This tartar, in its crude state, contains lime and other impurities, which no process of refining known prior to that here described was able to entirely remove.

It has been possible, it is true, to neutralize the lime to some extent by the aid of chemicals, and this method was resorted to in order to procure cream of tartar in small quantities for pharmaceutical purposes; but it was open to serious objection in view of the fact that the chemicals employed were not always washed out but remained in quantities that were uncertain and prejudicial to its quality. The supposed impossibility of removing the lime has, accordingly, caused cream of tartar to be classed and sold as pure when it did not contain more than five per cent of this impurity. The major part, however, of that used in commerce, or for culinary purposes, contains the tartrate of lime to an extent much greater than five per cent, not infrequently being found, upon analysis, debased to a degree equaling one-fourth or more of its entire weight.

In a report upon the subject of food adulteration made to the New York State Board of Health by Professors Chandler and Love, it is stated that of 27 samples of cream tartar bought from dealers as pure 16 were adulterated with various substances from 3 to 96 per cent, while of the remainder all contained tartrate of lime, some as high as 10.59 per cent.

The serious character of this adulteration is more readily appreciated when it is recollected how largely cream of tartar enters into the preparation of the food of every family. In connection with soda in baking powder it is the chief agent now employed for raising and making light and digestable all our biscuit, cake, and other pastry, and is besides, in many communities, superseding the old fashioned yeast for all leavening purposes, so that it is employed to some extent in almost every meal of which we eat. The amount of cream of tartar used in this country in a years in baking powder and otherwise in the preparation of food, is estimated at ten million pounds. If this were 90 per cent pure—a high estimate—we would consume one million pounds or more of lime annually as a substitute for bread. So large a deterioration becomes appreciable in the deprivation of our food of a portion of its nutritive elements not only, but if, as is now supposed, this excess of lime taken into the system has a relation to the painful affections of the kidneys so prevalent in this country, its bearing upon the health of the entire community is too important to be overlooked.

The new process by which cream of tartar is produced 100 per cent pure—that is, with the lime totally eliminated,—by treating the crude material under pressure instead of using any chemicals whatever for the purpose, was the discovery originally of a German chemist, but has been developed and perfected by the Royal Baking Powder Company of this city, through whose efforts a few years since in behalf of a high standard of purity in food, the public was rid of the poisonous alum baking powders at that time so prevalent.

The determination of this Company to place upon the market only absolutely pure goods, and the impossibility of doing this from the cream of tartar of commerce, made it apparent that some new method must be sought by which cream of tartar could be produced in large quantities free from lime and chemically pure. The cream of tartar refiners of this country and Europe when approached upon the subject, declared such a result impossible, and declined to incur the expenditure necessary to make the trial. The Royal Baking Powder Company, accordingly, resolved to solve the problem for itself, and having secured the aid of the best chemists of Europe and America, proceeded with its investigations and discoveries until the result, after several years of labor and the expenditure of over half a million dollars in the purchase of patents, perfecting of processes, and the erection of buildings and machinery was reached in the complete attainment of the end sought. The works now owned by The New York Tartar Co., are located in Brooklyn, and exceed in size and capacity any other similar refinery in the world. They produce a chemically pure cream of tartar, which is now exclusively used for pharmaceutical preparations, and in the manufacture of the celebrated Royal Baking Powder.

The energy and outlay that have effected this will undoubtedly be fully rewarded by the public which it will chiefly benefit by the successful issue of the investigations. People are coming daily to more fully appreciate the value of pure and wholesome food. By the exclusive use of this chemically pure cream of tartar, the Royal Baking Powder is produced entirely free from lime, and absolutely pure, qualities possessed by no other baking powders yet made. A baking powder entirely free from lime or other impurity must not only contain more strength or leavening power and produce better food and therefore be more economical for use, but what is more important, possess qualities of superior wholesomeness.

Chemists and physicians have looked upon the experiments with much interest, and regard their success as a matter of much importance.

Adrian Record: Ex-Mayor Navin was, we believe, the only mayor who never drew the salary of his office. There is nearly the sum of $50 due him from the city. Mr. Navin went west on business, just before the expiration of his time, and on his return recently he made no claim of the salary due him.

THE COUNTY HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

We are indebted to the Adrian Times for the following report of the last meeting:

The county horticultural society held its monthly meeting at Workingmen's hall, April 1st.

The meeting was called to order by the president and the first subject taken up was the present condition of the grape. The prevailing opinion seemed to be that there was damage done the crop, or at least some varieties. The Concord was believed to be all right.

Mr. Blimlie asked if it was a good plan to cut back trees.

Mr. Edmiston answered that the summer pruning of vines or trees was not a good thing. The notion that the top should be opened to let in the sun was wrong. He gave instances where he had known that pruning when the leaves are on was unsafe as a rule, and gave damaging results.

Mr. Davis had good results from cutting back in the fall, just before the fall of the leaves, as the trees matured its wood better for winter.

All agreed, however, that summer pruning was injurious. Early spring was the time to trim apples, especially before the leaves are out.

Mr. B. W. Steere did not believe in the theory of trimming apples. He would use great judgment in pruning, and do it each year a little, as it was needed.

J. W. Helm stated that a peach tree would stand ten degrees more cold if cut back September 1, to make the new wood harden up better.

S. B. Mann stated that nature demanded an equilibrium between the root and top of the tree, and if the top is heavily pruned, the root should be also pruned to balance the loss of the top, and he believed if this be done there would be a less amount of sprouts and branches put out by nature in its effort to regain the equilibrium.

The discussion on this subject was general and interesting to all.

President Woodward did most of his pruning of peaches the first and second years after setting.

S. B. Mann asked how to best preserve a tree that had been girdled near the ground during the winter by mice.

Mr. Collar said it could be bridged over with scions from the tree put in above and below the wound.

Mr. Howes said he had saved a tree by hilling up a foot or so above the wound.

The secretary here read a communication from the Agricultural society, inviting this society to take charge of the fruit department at the county fair next fall, and after stating the matter fairly, he made a motion that the invitation be accepted and a committee appointed to take charge of the matter, to meet with the executive committee of the agricultural society.

The motion was carried.

D. G. Edmiston moved the appointment of a committee to nominate superintendents and judges, and report at the afternoon session. Carried.

The chair appointed the following: D. G. Edmiston, B. W. Steere, Peter Collar, S. B. Mann and A. Sigler. The secretary also referred to a letter and circular from the secretary of the state society, relative to the meeting of the American pomological society, to be held at Grand Rapids, September 9, continuing three days. The matter was referred to the same committee as the agricultural society matter. Quite a discussion was had on furnishing reports of the proceedings for the papers, and a general desire was expressed to have reports made as far as possible, and a general thankfulness was expressed for the notice of our discussions made by the papers. Moved that a standing committee be appointed on apples, pears, grapes, small fruits and flowers. The motion was carried. Ajourned to half past one o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was called to order at the appointed hour, and the committee on nomination of officers for the fair made its report as follows, which was accepted and adopted.

Superintendents—D. E. Edmiston, Adrian; B. I. Laing, Lenawee Junction.

Judges, class A—David Holden, Weston; Portor Beal, Geneva; H. C. Bradish., Adrian.

Judges, class B—A. Sigler, Adrian; Peter Collar, Adrian; J. O. Beal, Geneva.

Committee on revision of the premium list—D. G. Edmiston, Adrian; S. B. Mann, Lenawee Junction; A. Sigler, Adrian.

The regular question of transplanting trees was then taken up, and from a question by F. J. Hough, Mr. Edmiston said that as soon as the ground was well fitted in the spring was the best time to transplant. Planting trees in the fall was attended with more danger, owing to the uncertainty of the weather. Trees taken up in the fall and well hilled in during the winter, had an advantage if all things were favorable. He would prefer the tree was set when it was nearly dormant. When the buds had started there was danger. Maples would do better perhaps later. The same rule would not apply to evergreens. They do not start as early as other trees. Had found that evergreens can be put off later than any other trees. Mr. Helme had found fall setting for evergreens as good as any. Others had not, although the weather had much to do with it. Mr. Helme had had success in setting trees in the fall, and they would get better growth, and his experience also was that raspberries were best set in the fall.

The president had set a lot of raspberries in the second week in June, and never saw a better growth. These were the red raspberry.

Mr. Allis asked if the hilling up of trees planted in the fall would not injure the bark. A number answered no.

Mr. Collar had for many years hilled up his young trees, to prevent mice from eating the bark, and never had any injured.

Some one asked if there was any danger of setting maples too deep. Had set some fine trees, and had noticed those set the deepest died.

Mr. Allis had set them the same depth as he had taken them up, and he never lost any. F. J Hough had set out a row of maple trees the same depth as they were taken up and mulched them; they all grew and did well. He thought they should not be set any deeper than they grew, and then should be staked. He would set them pretty early.

The president had banked up trees for many years from ten to twelve inches and never lost any.

Then followed quite a discussion about the mischief done by mice and rabbits during winter. There were many devices for preventing it given.

C. P. Pulver asked if the cuttings of honey locust would grow if planted.

Mr. Helme and Mr. Edmiston both thought that they would not, to any extent. Cuttings for currants or grapes were better cut in the fall and kept in the cellar, but could be cut in the spring if before the growth starts. The cut should be as close to the bud as it can be conveniently, so that the new roots thrown out would be close to the end.

Mr. H. M. Pomeroy asked what was the best pear, everything considered. Mr. Collar said that the Lombard was the one, perhaps.

Arbor day was taken up, and the discussion was turned to the planting of trees on the new fair grounds. A motion was made that this society attend the setting of trees on the fair ground, when the day is appointed, and assist the agricultural society to its best ability to make the day a success. The motion was carried.

The next meeting will be held in the same hall on the first Wednesday of May.

The topics for the next meeting will be strawberries and other small fruits, flowers and shrubs.

"Kinks" at the Opera House next Wednesday evening.

Geo. W. Stacy of East Buffalo, is spending a day or two at his old home.

An Ann Arbor paper says; "Prof. Bauer laid two eggs on the editorial table." Prof. Bauer is certainly a most remarkable man.

The sky light in Brooks' photograph gallery is being taken out and the store enlarged. Mr. Brooks is moving into his new gallery in the Montague block this week.

Mr. Dudley Macham has purchased the barbar shop formerly owned by Art Bresie in the Sutfin block. He is having it painted, papered, and renovated throughout, and proposes to run a first class shop.

A. A. Besemer has secured the services of efficient and practical workmen, and is prepared to do all kinds of plain and docorative paper hanging, calcimining, painting, graining etc. Leave orders at Baker & Hall's, or Dr. Geo. Ferguson's.

Jimmy Glasgow, while unloading Elliot Gray's baggage yesterday, let a big box fall on his great toe, and—well, he will hobble about with a lame foot for several days. We are somewhat surprised that Jimmy should'nt know how to handle Irish baggage.

RINK RACKET.

The one mile race between Al. Heesen and Mont Rowland will be repeated at the Tecumseh rink next Tuesday evening. No chalk will be used on the floor thus giving Mont a better chance in turning the corners.

Alba and Otho Heywood rolled round the rink last Saturday evening.

The opera house rink observed good Friday by remaining closed on that evening.

The Tecumseh rink was crowded last Saturday evening, the principal attraction being the "great and only" Prof. Hall in his wonderful mesmeric and elec-trick specialties. The Prof. did some really wonderful tricks (with the help of a couple of assistants and a powerful electric belt around his body) but the audience probably would not have been half so appreciative had they been aware of the fact that two of the young men were using all their earthly strength in connection with the Professor's spiritual(?) strength in lifting up the chair and in holding the end of the pole up, "but where ignorance is bliss, etc." and the audience went home delighted with the evening's entertainment. The Professor was advertised to give a matinee Monday afternoon and another entertainment in the evening, but he failed to put in an appearance. He had left on the Monday morning train for parts unknown. The Adrian papers say he is wanted in that city for forging a note on one of the banks.

The masquerade advertised for tomorrow evening at the opera house has been postponed indefinitely on account of the rush of attractions this week.

At the skating rink: Newcomer—Yes, they seem to be having a good time; but don't they hurt themselves by falling so frequently? The floor is very hard. Habitue—Yes, but the skaters are very soft.—Boston Transcript.

Clergymen and coachmen are enemies of the skating rink. The clergyman because it interferes with his revival meetings; the coachman because millionaires' daughters have ignored him and now elope with the fancy roller skater.—Norristown Herald.

TECUMSEH, MICH., APR. 9, 1885.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

John F. Hicks has been spending a few days at home.

There was an old fashioned crowd in town last Saturday.

Geo. Allen and wife of Toledo, Ohio, have been visiting friends in town.

Mr. Geo. Parks of Hudson, spent last Sunday with friends in Tecumseh.

C. E. Triplet of Macon, came home from Lansing to remain over town meeting.

J. S. Kinney has trimmed up the west show window of his store with a fine casket.

F. C. Barnes of Coldwater, who was foreman of Geo. N. Stacy's cigar box factory, has been in town for a few days.

Milan Sage of Macon, will sell all tile at a discount, purchased at his yards this spring. Write to him for particulars.

William Delamater, who went to school in Tecumseh years ago, has been visiting relatives in town a few days. He now lives in Indiana.

The old reliable firm of Strong & Mc Nair have a change of advertisement this week. They are now putting in a mammoth stock of new spring goods.

Rev. W. DePuy closed a three years' pastorate with the Baptist Church of Grand Ledge last Monday. A heavy debt of several years' standing was paid during his pastorate.

The snow has gone off so gradually that we are not threatened with our usual spring freshet. The Raisin has been "up" during the past week, but not as high as in former years frequently.

D. D. Marshall of Detroit, was in town over Sunday. His natural modesty restrained him from asking to vote on Monday morning, although some of his Democratic friends urged him to do so.

Elliot Gray and family returned from Ireland last Tuesday, all in good health. Mrs. Gray has not been home since her first trip across the ocean eleven years ago, but Mr. Gray has visited us once or twice every year. Their friends will be happy to learn that they have now come home to stay.

Adrian Press: Young man, be a devil in a printing office, if you would surely climb to fame. Here is Edgar Ide, a Tecumseh youth, who deviled in the News office, rose to chief compositor, and is now delivery clerk in the post office, with all the emoluments, perquisites, responsibilities, appurtenances and hereditaments thereunto pertaining, to have and to hold the same for his own proper use and benefit, until—well, until his successor puts in an appearance.

Ex-Supervisor James has entered the employ of the Tecumseh Lumber Co. at a good salary, and will hereafter be found at their office on Shawnee treet. On account of this business arrangement, he absolutely declined to run again this spring for supervisor. Mr. James has made an admirable officer during the time he has served in that office, and his Democratic friends did all they could to urge him to accept the place. His mantle, however, falls on good shoulders.

B. L. Baxter has been home and at Deerfield for a few days, attending to some business affairs. He went to Battle Creek yesterday, where he intends to open a law office, in partnership with his son Frank, who is already practicing there. Mr. Baxter and Frank are both well known here, and we commend them to the citizens of Battle Creek as good lawyers, and most estimable gentlemen. We have no doubt they will meet with success in their new field of labor.

Evening News: When President Grant accepted the resignation of Gen. Belknap, his secretary of war, and thus saved the latter from conviction in the impeachment proceedings, he was greatly blamed. If any greater penalty than the loss of his office was attached to the impeachment of Superintendent Gass, Gov. Alger might equally be to blame. But in resigning his position, and in its acceptance by the governor, the offending official has pleaded guilty and pronounced and executed sentence upon himself to the full extent of the law of impeachment. The legislature could do no more.

Isaiah Van Sickle, a deaf and dumb man of Morenci, generally known as "Dummy Dick", was run over by train No. 144, local freight, about 100 rods east of the depot last Monday morning and instantly killed. Deceased was a single man, 61 years old, and lived with his mother, in Seneca township. He was walking on the track, and being deaf could not hear the whistle, which was blown. He was struck by the pilot, drawn under the wheels, his right arm and thigh being crushed, and his back broken. The remains were gathered up by the section hands and brought to the depot. No inquest was held.

John Smith of Grand Rapids, was in town last week.

Billy Smallidge has gone into the draying business again.

A. L. Millard, of Adrian, was in town yesterday on business.

Repeated next Tuesday night Heesen and Rowland's mile race. Go and see it.

W. & S. W. Anderson & Co., have a new card this week. Go there for your carpets.

Chas. Thompson of Clinton, came down to laugh 180 times in 180 minutes last Tuesday evening.

Six converts had the rite of baptism administered to them at the Baptist church last Sunday evening.

Capt. Foster had a house full Tuesday night. The Alvin Joslin troupe put up at the Lilley House.

Miss Wellwood has opened dressmaking rooms at the Baptist parsonage, first door South of the Baptist church.

W. T. Eccles has secured Vance De Puy's steam peanut roaster, and will hereafter roast those toothsome articles by steam.

A black eye and a scar on the nose is generally a sign of a pugilistic encounter, but Lon says it is no such thing; he fell down cellar.

Whitenack, Bordine & Co., have added harnesses to their stock and will keep on hand a large supply. See their announcement on the first page.

Al. Heesen and Mont Rowland will again race for the championship of Tecumseh next Tuesday night. No chalk will be used on the floor in this race.

M. E. Conklin comes to the front this week with a new card, setting forth the merits of the Walter A. Wood harvesting machinery. Met intends to make it hot all along the line this spring.

No less than 200 persons were at the Chicago street crossing last Tuesday afternoon to witness the arrival of the Alvin Joslin troup, and about the same number crowded around Adamson's window trying to get a glance at Uncle Alvin's diamonds displayed therein.

The committee of the G. A. R. Post who have in charge the arrangements for the proper celebration of Decoration Day have secured Rev. T. C. Allen, of Detroit, as orator. The committee is already at work upon the details and the day will be celebrated in a befitting manner.

It is a generally conceded fact that for the finest display of boots and shoes, and for the lowest prices, that the establishment of Joe Wilson has no superior in Lenawee county. It is now crowded full with all the latest and best styles, and Joe says he intends to give the citizens of Tecumseh and vicinity the benefit of the very lowest prices. When in need of boots or shoes remember the old stand-by, Joe Wilson.

Alba Heywood again. Opera House Saturday, April 11th. one night only. Mr. Heywood brings with him new musical specialties. Hobert A. Davis one of the finest flute soloists in the land, and Mr. Frank Ulrich, accompanist. Mr. Davis execution and purity of tone is said to be marvelous and never fails to captivate his listeners. His variations seem scarcely possible to be performed on one instrument. Admission 10 and 15 cents.

Manchester Enterprise; A stranger who had evidently seen the editor, entered the Enterprise office during his absence last Tuesday and addressed the clerk thus, "Where is that man I talked with a few days ago? He works for you don't he?" Upon politely informing him that the man he referred to was the editor himself and that he was out of town, he tried to compromise the mistake by saying, "Beg pardon Miss but it was the other widow at the Brooklyn office that I had in my mind."

PRESBYTERY MEETING.

The Presbytery of Monroe will meet in the Presbyterian church, Tecumseh, on Tuesday, April 14th, at 7:30 P. M. and continue in session through Wednesday and probably part of Thursday. Its meetings are free to all. The opening sermon will be by Rev. G. H. Wallace of Manchester. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at the close of the sermon and members of other churches are invited to participate in the service.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbytery will meet in the church on Wednesday morning at 8:30, and again at 1:45 P. M. After devotional exercises in the forenoon there will be an address of welcome by Mrs. E. B. Wood of Tecumseh, and response by Mrs. M. A. Little of Adrian. Papers will be read by ladies from Adrian, Coldwater, Hillsdale, Monroe and Petersburg. Devotional exercises also at 1:45 P. M., followed by papers, etc. The ladies of Tecumseh are cordially invited to attend these meetings. On Wednesday the Presbytery will meet in the lecture room, the la- occupying the audience room of the church. On Wednesday night at 7:30 there will be a public Missionary meeting in the church at 7:30 with short addresses on topics of popular interest. The public generally are invited to attend this service.

Rev. J. M. Getchell, of Norwalk, Ohio, was the guest of Judge Stacy and family last Saturday and Sunday.

"Kinks," "Kinks,"
Beats the rinks.
"Kinks" at the Opera House on Wednesday evening next.

A tall, lank, lean looking stranger perambulated into the HERALD counting room last Saturday, about three sheets in the wind, and asked.

"Do you sell cigars here?"

"No Sir," replied the clerk.

"Do you sell beer?"

"No Sir.

"Is this the Opera House?

"No Sir, this is the HERALD office."

"Well, what kind of a printin' office d'ye keep here anyway? Whar are yer presses and type? I guess I'll hunt up a beer shop. Good day."

The Kinks Operatic Comedy Co. will appear at the Opera House on Wednesday evening next April 15th. Read this, endorsement which one manager gives to another in regard to "Kinks."

Albion, April 3d, 1885.

FRIEND TIBBITS:—I learn from Mr. Stevens that he is to be in Coldwater Saturday; I feel it to be my duty to Mr. Stevens to inform you that "Kinks" is the best operatic Comedy Co. that has ever been in our city. And they give a strictly first-class entertainment in every respect. I think they have the best talented vocalists on the road. Yours,
M. C. MOORE,
Manager of Opera House, Albion Mich.

EASTER DAY.

Services appropriate to Easter Sunday were held last Sabbath in all the churches.

Rev. W. H. Babbitt preached an Easter discourse in the morning to a large congregation.

Rev. C. E. Conley's morning discourse was upon a theme adapted to the day and the occasion, and a baptismal service was held in the evening

At St. Peter's church, in addition to the regular service at the usual morning hour, a special service was held at six o'clock in the morning, and a Sunday School Easter service at four o'clock in the afternoon.

At the Methodist church a Sunday School concert was given in the evening, when a fine program was presented to an overflowing house.

TURNING OVER A NEW LEAF.

Smith met Jones on the side walk last Monday morning and accosted him thus.

"Why, Jones, you are looking unusually well this morning. What is the matter?"

Jones—"Well, Smith, I feel well. The fact is, I have turned over a new leaf. Yesterday being Easter Sunday I went to church three times. We had a gentleman visitor at our house and as he wished to attend church, of course I showed him around. We took in the Presbyterian in the morning, went to the Episcopal at four o'clock, and to the Methodist Concert in the evening."

Smith—"Your Sunday lessons must have made a deep impression. Where was the text?"

Jones—"I don't now remember the text, but we found the finest new bonnets at the Presbyterian, the most pretty girls at the Episcopal, and the biggest crowd at the Methodist."

TIT FOR TAT.

"April Fool's" day has come and gone for this year, and there are two residents of Tecumseh who will remember the day for some time.

Soon after breakfast on the morning of April 1st, Frank Silvers overhauled Will. Eccles on the sidewalk near his store and said:

"Hello, Will, what is your pony doing out on the street? You'd better go home and shut him up or first you know he will be in the pound."

Billy "hustled himself" at once, took a double quick for home, and upon arriving there found the pony in the stable as usual, quietly finishing his morning meal of oats. The story got around with remarkable rapidity, and Eccles had to hand out a good many cigars during the forenoon.

Will Eccles can take a practical joke without flinching, but he believes in paying all debts of that kind promptly. So after dinner Mrs. Eccles wrote this note in a handsome feminine hand, which was sent by a special messenger, Harry Stevens, to Frank Silvers.

Mr. Silvers—Please call at the house of J. B. Swan for a passenger and trunk to take to the eastern train on the M. & O. this afternoon.
MRS. MCBRIDE.

Frank makes it a point to obey all hack orders with promptness. At three o'clock precisely he proceeded to Swan's residence and took a dray along to convey the trunk. A short talk with a servant at the door disclosed the fact that no passenger there wanted to take the M. & O. or any other train that day.

In the mean time, Harry Stevens had gone up there to see the show through, and was standing on the side walk when Frank came out from the house.

"I say, Frank," said Harry, "perhaps Mrs. McBride wants the hack to go and hunt up Billy Eccles's pony with."

THE TOWNSHIP ELECTION.

Last Monday was a very strange election day, especially as regards the weather. It was a beautiful mild day, the first real spring day of the season. The election itself passed off quietly, and a light vote polled. The total poll was only 621. The vote last fall was 770. There was but little splitting upon the township tickets either way, as the full returns given below, will show. The result on the state ticket was a surprise to everyone. A strong fight was made against Judge Cooley all along the line. This was due to several causes. The truth of it is, the state campaign on the part of the Republicans was most bunglingly managed from the outset. In the first place Judge Cooley was induced to decline a renomination. Then he was persuaded to recall his declination and consent to run. Then a movement was quietly engineered to capture the prohibition convention in his interest. This alliance at the present time was an anwise and unnatural one. The bitter animosity between the republicans and prohibitionists engendered by the last election was still unallayed. Many prohibitionists took offense at being swallowed in that manner and refused to vote their state ticket. Many republicans were angered by reason of the prohibition endorsement, and they likewis neglected to vote the state ticket. As a consequence the alliance proved to be a positive source of weakness. It cut both ways. It acted as a boomerang, like the democratic endorsement of Greeley in 1872. To make matters worse the republican newspapers opened a fusilade of abuse upon Major Morse, sneered at his empty sleeve, and slandered his private character. This unjust and uncalled for method of warfare served to consolidate the soldier vote against Judge Cooley. The result in this township shows that at least forty republicans and about ten prohibitionists refused to vote the state ticket at all. The same causes which worked in favor of Major Morse here operated to a greater or lesser extent throughout the state. In those sections of the state where the railroad influence is strong, Cooley ran largely ahead. In Adrian all the railroad employees, regardless of party, were at work for him during the entire day of election. Judge Cooley owes his defeat to the lamentable mismanagement of his own party friends.

Below we give the figures in detail showing the result in this township. A careful inspection of the figures will disclose some interesting facts:

THE TECUMSEH LUMBER CO.

Since the reorganization of the Tecumseh Lumber Co. after the fire last summer, and the employment of J. H. Smith as manager, the business of the company has been enjoying a steady and healthy growth. Notwithstanding the dull season of the past six months their business has been good and with the advent of spring they are opening the campaign all along the line. They have lately taken contracts to furnish the entire bill of lumber, including shingles, doors, windows etc. for both the new hotels and barns connected therewith to be built this spring at the north end of Devil's lake. Last week they filled two large orders from Jonesville for sash doors and blinds, and their shops are now crowded with work. Mr. Smith has gone north this week to buy another large stock of lumber, and he proposes to be in a shape to fill all orders that may come. He confidently expects to see a heavy season's business.

INSPECTION OF CO. C.

Inspector-General, James H. Kidd, visited Tecumseh last Friday and upon that evening he made an official inspection of Co. C. He arrived on the noon train from Adrian and during the afternoon he was engaged with Capt. Wood in looking over the records and making an examination of the clerical and routine work which devolves upon the different company officers. In the evening the members of the company assembled at the armory, and Capt. Wood put them through a drill. Over forty men including officers were in the ranks, and the company made a most creditable impression.

It is a difficult matter to keep up these military companies in many small towns. The membership is small, the officers inefficient, and the company falls below the standard. But whatever may be the case in other small towns, Co. C. ranks among the best of the companies in the first regiment. At least this was Gen. Kidd's assurance. He expressed himself as highly satisfied with the general appearance and efficiency of the company. Their arms and accoutrements were in the best condition of any company he had visited.

At the close of the inspection proper Gen. Kidd favored the boys with a nice little speech, complimenting them upon their condition, and adding a few words upon the desirability of keeping up a good state militia. With the present membership of the militia companies, and the men who have graduated therefrom during the past ten years, a force of ten thousand well drilled men could be enrolled on very short notice to be used in case of some public emergency. The General was decidedly in favor of strengthening the state militia by all possible means.

During the forenoon of Saturday Capt. Wood escorted the General about town and introduced him to several of our citizens who were most happy to make his acquaintance. Gen. Kidd made a most favorable impression, not only upon the company but upon our citizens also. He is a fine soldier and a thorough gentleman. He conducts a daily newspaper at Ionia, but that does'nt do him any harm. It does not detract in the least from his military capacity.

Capt. Wood was considerably elated over the good words spoken by the Inspector General about the company and he is prouder than ever of the boys whom he has the honor to command.

In behalf of the citizens we feel justified in saying that Tecumseh feels proud of her military company. We are informed that the company is in need of a new flag which ought to be purchased before the next annual encampment. If this be the case, the boys should not be backward in making their wants known. We believe that our townsmen would open their pocket books freely to help the boys out.

EXZEMA OR SALT RHEUM.
Another Clear and Positive Recovery—An Elderly Lady's Letter.
Among the numerous letters received by the proprietors testifying to the efficacy of Salt Rheum, the following will be found of interest to our readers, who may be sure of its genuineness, as the lady is well known for the purity and truthfulness.
WORCESTER, MASS., March 25, 1884.
Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:
Dear Sir—Until recently I have been for three years a sufferer from Salt Rheum. It followed then an attack of the epidemic, for which I was for a long time under medical treatment. I grieved myself greatly in the hands of the physicians who did, I have no doubt, all that could be done, but one thing is sure however, I was none the better for all the medicine they gave me. The painful and distressing disease made its slow but sure progress until I began to fear I should never get rid of it.
By means of one of those accidents that often result in so much blessing I had my attention called to your Favorite Remedy, which I was told would stand some good. I used it, and within a few months, more than I would have dared to hope for, I received a permanent cure. I am now perfectly free from Salt Rheum. What a comfort this is, and how thankful I am, you may well imagine. Hoping that many of those who may read this may be induced to try your Favorite Remedy, I remain, Yours truly,
MRS. DINAH PHATT.
Mrs. Phatt is a well known lady, where she is well known and esteemed. Salt Rheum could not exist in the presence of her pure blood. Her case was one of long standing, and she had spent much time in New York City for medical treatment.

CARE OF THE HORSE.

Rules Laid Down by Secretary Russell of the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture.

Too many horses are annually sacrificed by ignorance or carelessness in their management. Good horses cost from two hundred to three hundred dollars, and they should remain serviceable till twenty-five or thirty years old; but a horse is usually regarded old by the time he reaches half those years. With proper care, a young horse kept on a farm should improve on the farmer's hands, so that it would bring more than its cost after a few years of growth and training.

The feet are the most important part of a horse, and yet they are the soonest to fail, because the weakest part, and because we interfere more with nature in the treatment of the feet than in the treatment of any other member of the horse's body. Shoeing the feet of horses is a comparatively modern practice, and not a universal one, even now.

Horses were domesticated and used more or less for man's service longer ago than we have any authentic history. Indeed, the date of the domestication of all our domesticated animals antedates history. Shoes with sharp calks were used upon horses in northern countries in Europe in the ninth century, because it was found that, in these cold countries, horses could be made more serviceable in winter when so shod. The use of shoes has spread and been continued partly from habit or fashion. Shoeing is both an evil and an advantage. The quest on is: Does the good overbalance the evil? The lecturer believes it does. But, in his opinion, about one-third of the horses might safely go barefooted all the year around; another third might go without shoes part of the time, while the remaining third must be constantly shod.

Some eminent writers and lecturers have contended that all horses should go barefooted; but such conclusions result from limited experience and observation.

Horses' feet are unlike, and their work is not alike for all. There have been good feet and bad feet, ever since horses were known. The old roads of Rome, that led out from that "Hub of the Universe," like the spokes of a wheel, were, many of them, built of blocks of stone that must have been very trying to the feet of horses used for pulling the heavy loads drawn over them: and we know by the writings of the men of those days that, as now, the foot was considered as the best part of the horse.

The fore feet of a horse correspond to the hands of a man, the hoof representing the finger nail. The hoof grows downward, like the nails on our fingers, and any treatment to improve the hoof must begin at the top, near the hair, where all growth begins. Every farmer has noticed that if a horse gets a hoof calked near the hair, the blemish will never disappear till the hoof grows down the whole bigness of it.

The bottom of the foot, however, grows in another way. The frog grows from the heel, and is of entirely different material from that comprising the hoof, or horny shell of the foot. The growth from the heel is slow, and the wear of the frog and heel is very slight.

Very few farmers have ever seen a perfect frog. Shoeing always changes the character of this organ, and often ruins it, and the whole fact with it. Thrush always indicates bad treatment of the feet. Some think the frog is useless, even bad for the horse. Some men had charged it with being poisonous to the foot, as though nature ever created a disease. Nature strives to make us healthy, never to make us sick. That part we call the hoof is really a boot for the foot of the horse, and a most admirable boot it is when not interfered with by man. The real foot of the horse is inside of the boot, but comes so near the surface as to have sensation, and to give the animal a knowledge of the character of the ground trodden upon. The toe bone is sometimes within a half-inch or less of the outer part of the foot. Burning the hoof with a hot shoe to make a seat for the shoe, and to save using the buttress, is a practice to be severely condemned, as the hoof is liable to be seriously injured by such treatment. The danger is still greater when the toe calk is also burned in deeply, too. In such cases the hot iron may come within an eighth of an inch of the real foot, and make a horse, when shod, feel like a cat shod with walnut shells.

Shoeing with high calks raises the frog above the earth, so that little moisture reaches it. The frog is intended as a cushion for the foot, and to prevent concussion when it comes to the ground; but a dry frog is a very poor cushion. Lifting the foot from the earth upon high calks also prevents the frog from keeping the walls of the hoof spread in their natural position. Calks indirectly cause contracted heels, and quarter-cracks are only Nature's efforts to get more room to burst open the contracted boot and relieve the pressure upon the sensitive parts. High calks prevent the horse from feeling the ground he walks upon.

Bar shoes for constant use are not to be commended. They may be used to aid the cure of a difficulty, but should be removed as soon as practicable. Too many bar shoes are recommended by blacksmiths, because they get double price for making and setting them. Probably three-fourths of the team horses in Boston are wearing them.

The term "corn," as applied to a horse's foot, is a misnomer; for what are called corns start from the inside of the foot, while a true corn, like those men have, is caused by pressure from without.

The inflamed spots near the heels of horses are the result of internal inflammation, caused by concussion as the horse brings his foot to the earth. With a sound frog and no calks they could never occur.

We would not be understood as denouncing the blacksmith, for he is a useful member in a community. The farmers are more often to be blamed for the horse's lameness than are the blacksmiths.

Some farmers think more of a set of shoes than they do of the horse that wears them. The foot is constantly growing, and the shoe that fits the foot to-day will not fit it five or six weeks hence. The hoof grows long and downward at the toe, and unless the growth is worn off by going barefooted, or is pared away by the blacksmith, the toe gets so long that the horse can not travel except with difficulty. The wild horse knows enough to wear off the toes of his feet that he may travel with ease and flee from his enemies. Sometimes horses are brought to the shed, that require a dollar's worth of paring by the black-smith before the shoe can be set.

The hoofs need paring as often as once in four or five weeks in Summer to keep them in perfect shape. In winter the hoof grows more slowly, and may not need paring so often.

A barefooted horse will stand better on ice than a smooth-shod horse, provided they are given a loose rein, so they can keep their balance. The frog on a barefooted horse holds to the ice and prevents slipping. The frog should be let alone by the blacksmith. The shoe should be so light and low that the frog will have a bearing on the ground. The foot, if unshod, will have a level bearing all round, neither the heel nor the toe being the longest; and the shoeing should never disturb this evenness.

If an ignorant blacksmith refuses to shoe a horse as an intelligent farmer directs, the best thing to do is to tell the blacksmith that the horse can work on the farm without any shoes. Many farmers would be surprised to learn how many of their horses might safely go unshod through the summer. Sorefootedness from going barefooted never does any permanent injury. The feet wear thin under hard driving upon gravel roads, so the horse may go tender a day or two; but a little rest, or change to farm work, will give time for the feet to grow out again.

Hind feet are much stronger than fore feet. They seldom cause any trouble from corns or quarter-cracks. The hind feet will bear heavy shoes better than the fore feet. If horses are shod at all, they should be shod behind. It has been said that poor men must do mean things; but it never pays to do mean things that will cost something. It can not pay to save in the cost of shoeing, and, as a result, lose a good horse. He could not recommend tips for general use, because blacksmiths seldom pare down the toes sufficiently to keep the foot level. Tips must be set very often.

A "dry sole" horse can never be cured, and one that will interfere when barefooted, should be worked slow, or sold.

Most farmers feed their horses too much, rather than too little. Two pounds per day of hay and grain for each one hundred pounds of live weight, is usually enough to keep a horse in good condition. A horse should not be run as a manure-making machine. It is not profitable. Horses that bolt their grain should be taught to eat slowly. They may be cured of the habit by keeping several quarts of stones in the manger, well mixed up with the grain. Horses that are being wintered without much labor, will not need more than eight or ten pounds of hay, two quarts of oats and a few apples or roots daily.

Dry food is to be preferred to wet, except for heavy horses or those that cough.

The horse has the smallest stomach of any domesticated animal, and if we feed and then immediately water freely the food will be washed out of the stomach before it has had time to digest. The writer had seen the experiment tried in France, of feeding whole grain to a horse, then watering immediately and killing the animal within an hour. Some of the whole grain was found washed into the intestines, a distance of twenty feet beyond the stomach. It is a good rule to water half an hour before or an hour after eating.

It is dangerous to chill a heated horse suddenly with cold water, but a horse is never too warm to eat, if not too tired.—N. E. Farmer.

A NEW ENGLAND TAVERN.

Recollections by a Poet of a Peculiar Yankee Institution.

Midway between the two extremities, on the eastern shore of the lake, is a valley between two hills, which come down to the very edge of the lake, leaving only room enough for a road between their base and the water. This valley, half a mile in width, has been long settled, and here for a century or more has stood the old Anchor Tavern. A famous place it was so long as its sign swung at the side of the road: famous for its landlord, portly, paternal, whose welcome to a guest that looked worthy of the attention was like that of a parent to a returning prodigal, and whose parting words were almost as good as a marriage benediction; famous for its landlady, ample in person, motherly, seeing to the whole household with her own eyes, mistress of all culinary secrets that Northern kitchens are most proud of; famous also for its ancient servant, as city people would call her—help, as she was called in the tavern and would have called herself—the unchanging, seemingly immortal Miranda, who cared for the guest as if she were their nursing mother, and pressed the specially favorite delicacies on their attention as a connoisseur calls the wandering eyes of an amateur to the beauties of a picture. Who that has ever been at the old Anchor Tavern forgets Miranda's

"A little of this fricassee?—it is very nice;"

"Some of these cakes? You will find them very good."

Nor would it be just to memory to forget that other notable and noted member of the household—the unsleeping, unresting, omnipresent Pushee, ready for everybody and everything, everywhere within the limits of the establishment at all hours of the day and night. He fed, nobody could say accurately when or where. There were rumors of a "bunk," in which he lay down with his clothes on, but he seemed to be always wide awake, and at the service of as many guests at once as if there had been half a dozen of him.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in Atlantic Monthly.

THE CASHIER'S DAUGHTER.

The Merchants National Bank, of Toledo, Ohio, is recognized as one of the prosperous financial concerns of that busy city; and M. C. Warn, Esq., is well known as its Assistant Cashier. Mr. Warn has a daughter who suffered severely from rheumatism. Although only thirteen years old, this obstinate disease took a firm hold of her, and for months tortured her. Hearing that Mr. Warn had used Athlophoros to restore the young lady to health and anxious to know the effect of the medicine on one so young, a gentleman called upon Mr. Warn, to ask for information about it, which Mr. Warn very courteously gave in this wise:

"My daughter was indeed a sufferer. For several months she was laid up with rheumatism, and unable to go to school or to attend to her studies at home. We were quite perplexed to know what to do about it, for the disease did not yield to the ordinary remedies of the physicians. After she had endured much pain, I heard of Athlophoros, and tried a bottle. I was astonished, both at the completeness of the cure and the promptness with which it was brought about. I had supposed that a medicine so powerful as this might have left some unpleasant effects, but it is now many months since she was cured, and there has been nothing of the kind, nor has there been any return of the disease. My daughter is as well as ever, attends her school regularly, and is taking her usual interest in her studies. I have good reason to hold Athlophoros in very high esteem, and freely to recommend it to all who are afflicted with rheumatism."

From the Bank the gentleman went to the drug store of Messrs. Van Stone & Crosby. On asking Mr. Crosby what he knew about Athlophoros, that gentleman replied: "We have sold a good deal of it, and I have heard of its doing much good in many cases.

"Their names? Well, there is one just around the corner from here. He is a barber, working at Flower's barber shop on Jefferson avenue.

On asking Mr. Flower about rheumatism, he replied, "no, I haven't the rheumatism, but my man Thomas had it, and that—that What-dye-call-it, with the long name—that knocked it out of him. Better wait and see him; he'll be here in a few minutes." Presently in came Mr. G. W. Thomas, a bright and cheery looking young man of about thirty, who looked as if he had never suffered an ache. "Surely you are not the man who was laid up with rheumatism?"

"Yes, I am the man, was his reply, and I was all crippled up with it, so that I couldn't work. Yes, that Athlophoros is the stuff. I would give twenty-five dollars for a bottle rather than go without it. The rheumatism came on me when I was at work in Chicago. I was sick a long while. My first attack was in the fall of 1883. I tried liniments and everything else I could get. You know in a barber shop every body who comes in recommends something or other. Well, I took them all. I had to quit work. One Saturday night I was helped home from the shop, for I could not walk. On the way I got a bottle of Athlophoros. I liked the idea of it, because it didn't offer to cure everything; only rheumatism and neuralgia. I was undressed and put to bed, for I could not help myself. I took two tea-spoonfuls of the medicine, in milk. When I had had it down about two hours I began to feel numb. Now, I was not in pain. In about an hour and a half after that I felt prickly all over, as if with a lot of needles. Then I sweated. Oh! what a sweat! By Wednesday morning I was able to be at work again. Since that I have never lost a day. I took in all about three bottles.

"Well, you ought to see my old landlady, old Mrs. Smith. She is 73 years old. She had taken pretty much everything for her rheumatism; but no good. I had about enough of this medicine left for two doses, and I gave it to her. She took it, and it relieved her at once. Then she got another bottle. That was two months ago. She has had no return of the rheumatism; nor have I either."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall Street, New York.

Worse than Firearms.

The editor of an Omaha paper, in commenting on several cases in that city where children died from the effects of taking cough syrup containing morphia, remarks that opiates, poisons and narcotics are more dangerous than firearms. Mothers should note this and furthermore that different Boards of Health, after making careful analysis have certified that the only purely vegetable preparation of this kind, and one that is in every way harmless, prompt and and effective, is Red Star Cough Cure. Mayor Latrobe of Baltimore, and the Commissioner of Health, have publicly endorsed this valuable discovery.

The Model Farm.

The Keota (Iowa) Eagle has at last found a western man who is satisfied with a fifty acre farm. His name is Artemus Fisher, and he lives one mile and a half south of Keota. The Eagle tells the story of his management and of his success as follows:

He keeps one team of horses, three first class cows, and a nice little drove of the best hogs. He milks his cows for the creamery, and they made him nearly $200 last year; will perhaps do better this year. He will sell $500 worth of hogs this year, and have thirty stockers to keep over. He has $200 worth of flax-seed to sell; has an abundance of hay and grain to keep his stock in first-class condition during the winter. He keeps everything in apple-pie order about his farm; his cows revel in clover up to their eyes; he attends to feeding, watering and milking as regularly as the clock strikes, hence he gets the best results with the least possible feed. He keeps his stock under cover, and never allows any animal to shiver in the fence corners. He has a barn that is a model of convenience and economy. It is snow-proof, and as warm as the old kitchen. He has a first-class selection of fruit—not a large orchard, but a choice selection of the varieties that thrive and bear the best in this locality. Everything about the farm bears marks of intelligence, thrift and economy. Besides making a living for himself and the "old lady," he will sell at least $800 worth of stuff off his fifty acres this year, and not be exceeding former years either. There is no rush or hurry about this model farm. Everything goes off quietly and regularly. The expenses are very small and the gains sure.

Magnetic Storms.

Remembering the influence which the sun has been found to exercise upon the magnetic needle, the question will naturally arise, has the sun anything to do with magnetic storms? We have clear evidence that he has. On the 1st of September, 1869, Messrs. Carrington and Hodgson were observing the sun, one at Oxford and the other in London. Their scrutiny was directed to certain large spots which at that time marked the sun's face. Suddenly a bright light was seen by each observer to break out on the sun's surface and to travel, slowly in appearance, but in reality at the rate of about 7000 miles in a minute, across a part of the solar disk. Now it was found afterward that the self-registering magnetic instruments at Kew had made at that instant a strongly-marked jerk. It was learned at that moment a magnetic storm prevailed at the West Indies, in South America, and in Australia. The signal-men in the telegraph stations at Washington and Philadelphia received strong electric shocks; the pen of Bain's telegraph was followed by a flame of fire; and in Norway the telegraphic machinery was set on fire. At night great auroras were seen in both hemispheres. It is impossible not to connect these startling magnetic indications with the remarkable appearance observed on the sun's disk.—Prof. Proctor.

A Man Old General Routed.

Old "Genesal Debility" has been put to flight in Arkansas, with happy results. From Brinkley, from Webb City, and from Walnut Ridge, Messrs. P. R. Anderson, E. M. Taylor and F. S. This is pleasant to know, not only for Arkansas people, but for all sections of the country where General Dobility has counted victims by the thousand. For sale everywhere.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburgh, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by C. A. Wright & Co.

OLDEN TIMES

The formula by which Mishler's Herb Bitters is compounded is over two hundred years old, and of German origin. The entire range of proprietary medicines cannot produce a preparation that enjoys so high a reputation in the community where it is made as

I have used myself and in my family several bottles, and I am satisfied that the reputation is not unmerited."

FROM NEW ORLEANS.

EDITOR HERALD.—I wish you to say to my Tecumseh friends that a visit to the Exposition at this time would give them great pleasure. There has been a great improvement since I left here in January. The weather is delightful, accommodations near the grounds are abundant. You can get a room at the Windsor and day board at the restaurant at about two dollars per day. The Exposition is a great success and a great failure. You may believe almost every thing you have read about it. It is a success in that it displays the natural productions of the country in a wonderful manner. It is a success in that it shows the progress in inventions by a wonderful collection of machinery. It is a failure in that it has taken four months nearly from the time set for the opening to complete it, and there does not appear to be the shadow of a doubt that it will be a financial failure. But that should not deter you from visiting the Exposition. Dear old Uncle Samuel will foot the bills and keep the sheriff outside the gates until the show is over, for his Prodigal Son has returned and he would have us to be merry. Come, and tell my friends to come and they will be treated fairly. I shall be glad to see them and serve them.

FARMERS SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday evening, March 27th. The Farmer's Social Club met at the residence of I. H. Schreder. There was a large attendance of the club considering the lateness of the season and state of the roads. The literary exercises as arranged for the meeting were carried out without a single break in the program, and were all very appropriate for the occasion. There was no question for discussion, but in lieu thereof the ladies served us with an excellent supper that was in every way befitting the occasion. After supper and an animated visit among the club lasting until almost the "wee sma hours" the club adjourned for four weeks, to meet at the residence of John Fisher, Friday afternoon, April 24th at 2 P. M. Exercises for the next meeting

OBITUARIES.

From the La Porte Herald of April 2nd we clip the following obituary notice of Sybrant Van Nest. The deceased was a resident of Tecumseh many years ago, and for some time was engaged in the hardware business on the same site now occupied by Satterthwaite Bros. & Boyd. He will be remembered by many of our older citizens.

Sybrant Van Nest passed from this life Friday, March 27, at midnight, in the eighty-third year of his age. He was born in Johnstown, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1802. In 1816 he moved with his father, to Jefferson county, where he remained until he was twenty-one years of age. He then went to Monroe county, where, after two years, he married Miss Sarah Barnum, with whom he lived for over fifty years. After a residence in Michigan and Minnesota he came to LaPorte in 1855, where he was engaged in the hardware trade. He retired from business some years ago. During his residence in LaPorte his wife and one son passed on to the higher life. Two children are left, one of whom is Charles Van Nest and the other the wife of Mr. Lafayette Crane. He was a man of strong character and good business capacity and one who was much trusted and respected in the communities in which he lived. Twice he held the office of Justice of the Peace, once in Michigan and once in Indiana. He laid out one town in Michigan and one in Minnesota in the early days. He was naturally of a religious turn of mind. Early in life he joined the Presbyterian church and continued a member for many years. His mind was well stored with sound and practical information. He was very independent in his thought. He was much interested in politics, read his paper daily, and discoursed of the affairs of the times with much zeal and earnestness. Life was a blessing to him, and yet he had no fears of death. He had no anxiety in regard to the future, but died as the righteous die, trusting and hopeful, commending him of unto the care of an All-Wise Father, who is infinite justice, infinite mercy and infinite love.

Mrs. Lydia Ann Wooden departed this life at her family home in the town of Cambridge on Saturday, March 21st., aged 71 years, 6 months and 5 days.

The deceased was born Sept. 20, 1813, in Green Co., N. Y. At the age of fifteen she removed with her father's family to Chili, Monroe Co., in the same state. She was married to Robert Wooden, her surviving husband, on the 14th day of November, 1830, and removed to Gates, Monroe Co., in April 1833. Here she found a pleasant home until October, 1845, when she moved with her husband to Cambridge and settled upon the farm where the family have since resided. Mrs. Wooden was the mother of 8 children, six of whom have grown up to manhood and womanhood, and most of whom have children of their own. She was a Christian woman, and an ardent Universalist in her religious belief, having embraced that faith over forty years ago. Her husband mourns the loss of a loving and dutiful wife, her children are bereft of a kind and devoted mother, the neighborhood in which she lived has lost a "mother in Israel". The funeral services were held at the Baptist church in Onsted, which were largely attended, and an eloquent discourse was preached by Rev. E. L. Rexford, D. D., pastor of the Church of Our Father in Detroit. "Blessed are they that die in the Lord."

Mrs. H. J. Snell has received a copy of the Beloit, Wis., Free Press, which contains a notice of the death of Miss Jennie Lawton, daughter of Prof. U. W. Lawton, who was the Superintendent of the Tecumseh Schools from 1857 to 1862. Some of our people enjoyed a personal acquaintance with Miss Jennie, and all who knew Prof. Lawton will deeply sympathize with him in this bereavement.

Entered into rest on Palm Sunday, March 29th, after an illness of six weeks, of meningitis or inflammation of the meninges of the brain, Jennie A., youngest daughter of Prof. U. W. Lawton, in the 21st year of her age.

The death of Miss Lawton awakened deep sorrow in this city. No young lady during so short a residence in Beloit, dating only from the latter part of August, had drawn around her a larger circle of friends. All who became acquainted with her admired her, not only for her agreeable manners, but also for her pleasant and genial character. There was nothing affected in her nature. She was always what she seemed to be. Her coming, as the bright sunshine, brought cheer and comfort. The home was made glad by her voice and helping hand, her friends happier by her presence. To high, social qualities and unaffected graces of the heart, was added the charm of high intellectual gifts. Her mind had received a generous culture, and her knowledge of the best literature was beyond the range of most young ladies of her age.

Her success as a teacher before coming to Beloit commended her to the favorable attention of our City School Board, who, at the beginning of the school term which closes to-morrow, elected her to a vacancy in school No. 1, where her few weeks of work won the affection of pupils and patrons, and secured to her the full confidence of the board.

Her work in St. Paul's church, of which she was a communicant, brief though her stay, will be held by the members in loving memory. Deeply will they sorrow at the loss. She came among them, gained their love, stimulated them by her Christian example to more earnest endeavor, and then passed on to higher scenes and a more exalted work. The dutiful daughter, the sister whose heart was full of love, the friend that attached herself to all that was noble and true, has been called to the Paradise of God.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Leslie and Ray Silvers, of Hudson, are visiting at their uncle's, D. H. Silvers.

E. R. Smith started for New York last Saturday to buy goods. W. D. VanTuyle accompanied him.

Preparations are being made in the Silver's building for the opening of Bush and Swift's grocery, flour and feed store. To those who have been accustomed to frequent the skating rink, this will be a decided damper on their sport, but the ones who have been wont to regard the rink as the source of all evil and full of "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," will doubtless hold forth an encouraging hand to the new firm. Whichever side we may be on, we wish the gentlemen success in full measure.

Mr. A. C. Huntington, of Hanover, Ill. spent a couple of days here last week. He was on his way to visit his daughter, who is at Ann Arbor.

John T. Clark, went to Toledo last Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradley, of Battle Creek, have been visiting at John Hause's for several days. Mrs. Bradley is a sister of Mrs. Hause.

Mat. Lancaster, of Brooklyn, was in town the first of the week.

The M. E. church underwent a thorough cleaning last Tuesday and Wednesday. The ladies of the church did the work, and we can vouch for its being done in a highly creditable manner.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Whittelsey with their two children, accompanied Mrs. Freese home from Ypsilanti last Saturday. Mr. Whittelsey staid until Monday, but we understand that his wife will remain about three weeks.

Mr. Hopkins, of Tecumseh, has been painting a portrait of Miss Clyde Marstellar. It is said by those who have seen it, to be a very fine piece of work, and is very satisfactory to the friends of the young lady.

Mrs. Ennis and daughter, of Brooklyn, have been visiting relatives here.

The supper and entertainment given by the Catholic society last week Wednesday was very successful. The supper was excellent and those who partook found themselves well waited upon and served to the best the occasion afforded. The entertainment was well attended, and every one was greatly pleased. The actors all did themselves credit. There was not quite so good an attendance the second night; but their efforts were rewarded by a considerable sum after all expenses were paid.

A novel game was introduced at the Episcopal social, held last Thursday evening at W. D. VanTuyle's. It is called "Beans" and has the unusual quality of entertaining the lookers-on as well as the participants. The next social will be held at the residence of E. VanDeMark, Thursday eve, April 30th. All go and play beans.

The entertainment presented by Alba Heywood last Monday evening was liberally patronized, and judging from the applause following each selection, we should say it was well appreciated. Clinton people seem by no means to tire of Mr. Heywood's entertainment, but each repetition calls out a larger audience. An additional charm was presented Monday evening in the excellent music furnished by Hobert A. Davis and Frank Ulrich, the former flute soloist, the latter, pianist. The music was of a high order and finely executed, making the time of waiting between Mr. Heywood's selections seem very short. The evening's entertainment seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by everyone. The expenses were paid and proceeds shared equally by Mr. Heywood and the Episcopal society. The net profit for each was over $16.

The annual meeting of the Clinton Woolen Mill stock-holders was held last Monday P. M. The following officers were elected.

President—Mr. Brownell.
Secretary—W. S. Kimball.
Treasurer—Mr. Hamilton.
Superintendent—Mr. Russell.
Trustees—W. S. Kimball, J. S. Kies, Mr. Hamilton, Levi Richmond, and Mr. Brownell.

Mrs. F. L. Couch, of Bay City, arrived here last Tuesday to superintend the repairing of her house. It will be occupied by C. S. Burroughs.

NORTH MACON MUSINGS.

We have a delightful item of news to communicate.

We begin to be almost sure that the coming of spring will not be delayed much longer. Our plump red coated friends, the robins, are singing again in the evergreens, and seem to be preparing to set up anew their homes among us. On southern slopes, there is a faint suspicion of tenderest most delicate green. Once or twice too, we have fancied we almost felt her delicious presence coming near or wafted on the wings of the gentle south wind, but as yet Old Boreas has stopped her timid approach. Then too, surest sign of all, friend Melanchton has started his meat-wagon. Who ever heard of a meat-wagon perambulating the country in the winter? Moreover moving days and moving times are upon us. Just now too, ye hired man hies him to his place, to begin his busy season's work. And lastly the house wife is just aching to see those dusty curtains come down, and those dustier carpets come up, while the men, oh! they are groaning at the awful prospect ahead of the lie leaches to be set up, of stove pipes to be taken down, of carpets to be beaten, and all the other semi-annual tortures which these dreadful women subject them to, at house-cleaning time. Does it appear a little as if Spring is coming? Another confirmation.

Rumor has it, that orange blossoms were seen last evening, worn by one of the fair daughters of—well another week will tell whose.

Thanks to Dr. Morden's skill, and the good wife's care and cooking aided by the blissful sense of being at home once more, our friend A. K. Jourdan seems to be recuperating from the fatigue following his long journey home from the land of flowers. Friend J. is rather of the opinion now, that roughing it away from the comforts of home, is not the best way for an invalid to recover his health, even in sunny Florida.

The Sabbath school has been reorganized at Pennington's Corners, and may we be permitted to indulge the hope, that neither long distances, bad roads, nor inclement weather, may be suffered again to suspend its workings, but that it may become an "Evergreen school."

BRITTON BUDGET.

Local items scarce this week.

John Exelby has the foundation built for his hotel.

John Britton has moved in with his son William, to make room for J. P. Beckler the hardware man.

John Britton & Son are getting pretty well sold out of their stock of groceries at cost. Now is the time to buy good boots at cost at J. Britton & Son's.

William Bennett is the man who fixes the boys up with a good shave for 10 cents, and boys look out when the preacher calls.

Rev. Mr. Wright, of New York, filled the pulpit last Sabbath at the Christian church and they wish to procure his services for one year if the necessary funds can be had.

The sugar festival at the church has been given up until the roads get better.

The band is progressing finely under the leadership of J. C. Moore and are able to play a number of pieces.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The Heywood troop gave three entertainments at Union hall, and the last called out as large a crowd as the first, which is praise enough. Character artists are appreciated here, and no wonder, for the place contains fifty-eight widows and widowers who require amusement. Among the twenty one men, and thirty seven women, who compose the band, are twenty recipients of especial grace. The tidal wave of friendship that always precedes an election has receded and powers that be are familiar with authority. The propriety of ladies voting for school officers is being hinted, but there has not been enough light wasted on the subject to make it nauseating.

RIDGEWAY LITERARY.

The following program will be presented at the next meeting of the literary society to be held April 24th 1885.

Music—Society.
Rec.—Jennie Underwood.
Dec.—Will Smith.
Rec.—Eva Pocklington.

It is expected that the Wilcox & White organ ordered by Mr. Sharp, of Brooklyn, for the society to try, will be here. A program is being carefully prepared for the public entertainment to be given by the society May 8th and will be one of the best.

BY ORDER OF COM.

ONSTED ODDS.

David Corwin has his wagon shop well under way. He has several orders waiting for him.

School commenced in district No. 5 on Monday last with Miss Mary Lawton of Clayton as teacher.

Thomas Sammons has bought a farm near Lansing. He shipped his household goods from here last Monday. Success to him.

Mrs. Drake, widow of the late John Drake, died at her home last Monday morning. The funeral will be held today.

Charles E. Jessup has bought A. J. Ayres store building at Springville, and intends to fit it up by putting in new shelves, counters, etc.

A FEW POINTS ON FLORIDA.

Andrew Wilson of Franklin returned home last week from a winter's sojourn in Florida. On Saturday he dropped into the HERALD office with an armful of oranges which he gathered in Swan's grove at Kerr City, and which we have since sampled with much gusto. Among the lot were a fine specimen of grape fruit and a hybrid orange, which he left on exhibition for a few days. During his call we took the liberty to interrogate Mr. Wilson about his visit and gathered a few points, which will doubtless be interesting to our readers.

"I went down to Florida last November with the Tecumseh party," said Mr. Wilson, as he seated himself in the big arm chair, "and remained there about five months. We went from here to Cincinnati, then took the Crescent route to Chattanooga and from there to Jacksonville. I spent some time at Sorrento where Dr. Hause's and Frank Bumann's orange plantations are located, and the balance of the time with J. B. Swan at Kerr City.

It is useless to tell you about the delightful climate of that state, as that is pretty generally known now. There is no better land under the sun, I verily believe, in which a man who is tired out with overwork, can go and recuperate his health. The climate is excellent for all kinds of throat and lung diseases. Catarrhal patients especially are almost invariably cured. Martin Wheelan of Franklin, who is a great sufferer from catarrh, has been wholly restored during his winter's visit there.

Florida is the especial home of the orange and other semi-tropical fruits. Vegetables of all kinds and small fruits flourish and yield abundantly, but cereal crops do not do as well. Immigration has been pouring into that state for the past three or four years at a lively rate and it is probable that fruit and vegetable raising may be over done. That remains to be seen. For general farming however I prefer Michigan. In fact, I know of no better state in the whole Union for a farmer of moderate means than our own Michigan. I doubt very much whether I should enjoy a permanent residence in Florida, but for a few months sojourn during the winter months, it is the state to visit above all others. My friends say I will certainly go down again next winter, and I shouldn't be surprised if I did.

On my return home I took one day to visit St. Augustine, that quaint old town on the Atlantic coast and visited the cathedral, the slave-market of by-gone days, and other points of interest. I left Jacksonville Monday afternoon at five o'clock and arrived in Tecumseh Wednesday evening at seven.

The weather has seemed terribly cold since I got here, but I am getting used to it. The past winter has been much colder than usual, even in Florida, the thermometer at one time going almost down to freezing. Thirty-four degrees was the lowest point touched at Kerr City and the average temperature during January and February was from 50 to 60 degrees."

The May number of Demorest's Magazine is very attractive, and compares favorably with those that have preceded it. The opening article, which is illustrated, "A Half Month in Nassau," will be read with interest. Professor Barnard's serial, "A Strange Girl," is continued, and Jennie June contributes an interesting paper, "College Government." There are several good stories and poems, articles on art, household decoration, and fashion. "The World's Progress," is continued, and the other departments are well filled. The frontispiece is a very fine picture of General Grant, one of the most perfect likenesses ever taken of this distinguished soldier and Ex President of the United States.

BAXTER OF TECUMSEH.

B. L. Baxter, the laugh and grow fat lawyer of Tecumseh, will remove to Battle Creek and enter a law partnership with his son Frank, already a practicing lawyer of Battle Creek. Mr. Baxter loves a good joke and enjoys nothing better than to be the perpetrator and lead the laugh that is sure to follow, always jumping up and down and spatting himself in ecstacy. A very good joke is recalled, however at which Mr. Baxter didn't jump. It was at his expense. Years ago, when the Deerfield passenger house was merely an old hovel under the water tank, Mr. Baxter was one day waiting for the train. The old station was intolerable and the lawyer, though a strict temperance man, strolled across the track to a saloon in front of which were a number of persons, one of whom leaned back in his chair against the building, in that apparent state of happy unconsciousness generally produced by Deerfield "budge." It had been an excellent maple sugar spring and Mr. Baxter remarking the fact mentioned an acquaintance who had made a fabulous amount from a few trees; when suddenly the supposed unconscious bum opened his eyes raised his head and remarked, "I-I-I know a man w-who made a thousa'd' poun's sug'r from thirty trees." Here the old fellow's chin dropped again, as he subsided into his former state; his eyes closed and he seemed dead to the world. "Well," remarked Baxter to those around him, "that beats my story. I'd like to know how a man could make a thousand pounds of sugar from thirty trees." Once more the bum became galvanized into life, his eyes opened, chin raised: "Water'd 'is sap!" broke from his lips. The roar of laughter that went up, was joined in by all except Baxter himself and the old soaker, who had relapsed into unconsciousness and took no part in the merriment.—Adrian Record.

A BAKING POWDER TRICK.

All kinds of schemes and tricks are resorted to by unprincipled persons to obtain unfair advantages over their neighbors. The latest and most dishonest of these that has come to their notice is one by which certain manufacturers of baking powder have sought to prejudice consumers against the use of other brands that have an established reputation as the best and purest in the market, for the purpose of introducing their own. Their method, we are informed, is to heat a can of baking powder of a well-known brand over a lamp or stove, when, if there is a gas given off having the odor of ammonia, the powder is condemned as being made of ammonia and unfit for use. The prejudices of the unsuspecting are thus excited against the baking powder submitted to the so-called test, and the grocer who has a quantity of it on hand suffers a serious loss in consequence.

If the intelligent consumer will stop a moment to think, she will readily preceive that this "test," if successful, proves nothing but the superiority of the baking powder tested. The aim of all baking powder makers is to produce an article that shall most readily, under use, give off its leavening gas. The powder that does this with a moderate heat, at the same time evolving the largest quantity, is scientifically the best.

There is probably not an article prepared for food that cannot be manipulated to prove that something is wrong about it; and when a person goes into a kitchen or before a housekeeper who is not to be presumed to understand chemical relations, and performs an experiment of even the simplest character, it is not difficult to impress one that something awful is the matter. As to baking powders, we could suggest a dozen tests that would be as ridiculous in giving a fair idea of their relative merits to an uninstructed mind as the one here mentioned.

The true domestic value of a baking powder consists in its purity, wholesomeness, and leavening power. It is only the chemist, with his chemical appliances, who can determine these qualities, scientifically and exactly. Aside from this, the best test for a baking powder is to try it in making bread, and see which makes the most and the best. To this practical test all the established brands have been put, and housekeepers have very generally made up their minds which they prefer, and the tricksters will find ultimately that a brand that has been a household favorite for years will not be displaced by reason of any tricks which they may show.

It is a notable fact that, in addition to what is going on in civilized countries, there is a movement against liquor in some of the uncivilized countries of the earth. Madagascar, only half a century out of barbarism, rigidly prohibits the importation, manufacture, and sale of alcoholic liquors. The African Trading Company of Zambezi, a native corporation, will not allow liquor to be transported in their ships. This because of its dreadful effects among barbarous and semi-civilized people. It is one of the scandals and shames of Christendom, that the commerce of Europe carries liquor to all the uncivilized nations, and to this cause, more than any other, is due the degradation and gradual disappearance of once happy and healthy races.—From Demorest's Monthly for May.

THE FORCES BENEATH US.

The Phenomena of Volcanoes and Earthquakes.

The intensity of the subterranean forces over any given area of the earth's surface is in a constant state of ebb and flow, now rising to a flood of great power, now ebbing into a long period of quiescence, and then again gathering force for a new and awful manifestation of energy. It would seem that the volcanic forces of Southern Europe are again approaching a period of maximum intensity. But so recently as the summer of 1883, the beautiful little island of Ischia was convulsed by earthquake shocks. It was the season of the year when all was at its gayest and brightest, the little capital being filled by the many Neapolitans and Romans who find it so delightful a retreat in summer. On a bright July evening, when all were sitting out in the clear, calm air, under a cloudless sky, there came a sudden earth-throe, and in a few seconds the charming town of Casamicciola was a shapeless heap of ruins, whilst the other small towns which dot the little island shared in a less degree the same fate. Only two years before another shock had been experienced over the same area, but the earthquake of 1883 was of much greater intensity than that which preceded it.

It is but a few months, too, since the subterranean forces seemed to threaten an outbreak in our own country, manifesting their gathering energy by a slight earth-tremor in Suffolk; and now Spain has been the scene of their awful activity. On Christmas night last, the inhabitants of Madrid were thrown into a state of alarm by two slight vibrations. On the same evening more violent earthquakes occurred in the provinces of Andalusia, Malaga and Granada. In the town of the latter name the whole population, we are told, fearing a repetition of the shocks, camped out in squares and other open places. On the morning of the 29th three severe shocks were felt at Granada; whilst at Torrox, in the same province, several yet more violent shocks were experienced later in the same day. The greater part of the Alhama has been overthrown, more than 1 of the inhabitants of Albuñuelas killed, and the cathedrals of Seville and Granada seriously damaged. Each day the provinces of Granada and Malaga were shaken by fresh earth-throes, and the loss of life has been very great. The subterranean forces augmented in intensity daily, reaching a maximum on December 31, when a more severe shock than any experienced previously was felt at Granada, that being the tenth which up to that date had occurred there. The inhabitants were panic stricken; thousands fled from their homes; those who remained paced the streets in religious processions, headed by their priests, imploring the Divine clemency. From this date the shocks were less violent in character, although a severe one shook Alhama on January 12, and they have now happily altogether ceased. About the same time, an earthquake seems to have been experienced at sea, the Captain of a Cadiz bark reporting a shock, accompanied by a loud roaring noise, on December 18, when he was not long out of Cadiz, seven days, however, before the first shocks were experienced in the Spanish provinces.

Often in the world's history must Spain have been the field of volcanic activity, as her crumbling caves remain to attest, and it was in this corner of Europe that the greatest manifestation of subterranean energy in modern times occurred. The story of the earthquake which one hundred and thirty years ago destroyed Lisbon is a familiar one. Then, as in the case of the present earthquake, the inhabitants do not appear to have had any warning of the coming danger, but suddenly a noise like the rolling of thunder was heard underground, this being followed immediately by a tremendous shock which threw down the greater part of the city, and in the course of a few minutes sixty thousand persons perished. The sea first struck, and then rose to a height of fifty feet above its ordinary level, and the new quay just completed, on which the people had collected for safety, sank with all its human freight, and where it had stood, there was afterwards found to be one hundred fathoms of water, if, indeed, as some accounts say, the sea was not there unfathomable. The effects of this earthquake were felt over so large a region that it has been calculated a portion of the earth's surface equal to four times the area of Europe was included within its range. From the West Indies and the great inland lakes of Canada it extended its range to our own country, to Sweden, and to North Germany. The shock then too was also felt at sea, producing an effect similar to that which follows when a vessel strikes a sunken rock or runs aground.

But whilst earthquakes may thus seem to happen without the slightest warning, there can be but little doubt that, if apparent carelessness, the result of want of observation or to a wilful disregard of the signs which indicate the approach of subterranean outbursts, advent of subterranean outbursts. Light approach is usually heralded in many ways: underground noises, gaseous emanations from the earth, the drying up of wells, a change in the temperature of the mineral springs, dullness in the air, being the more common premonitory phenomena of these phenomena. At other periods, not a sense of danger, but a sense of awe is experienced by dwellers in those regions which are subject to these terrible visitations. I charge, be any in the district ill regarded slight rumblings of subterranean activity. During the early morning of the earthquake the ground upon which we stand, the sea, produce strange feelings akin to the familiar feeling of giddiness. Fissures open in the earth, and permanent changes take place in the geographical features of the country. Thus the series of earthquakes which in 1855 and 1857 visited New Zealand, caused so distinct a change that the former features of the coast could be no longer recognized. The earthquakes of the present century in Chili have produced a permanent elevation of the coast there, and the great subterranean outburts in Java have considerably modified the geography of that region.

Concerning the origin of these phenomena so far-reaching in their effects, it must be admitted that the true theory has never yet been framed. Early speculations were much tinged with the superstitions of the time, and even so late as the beginning of the present century we find a lingering remnant of this superstitious regard of physical phenomena in the naming, by the inhabitants of Sindree, of a mound thrown up during the Indus earthquake, "Allah Bund," or the Mound of God.

It is obvious that the study of these interesting phenomena is beset with many difficulties. Observation can often only be made at imminent personal risk. Yet, spite of this, beginning with the few observers and the almost mythical records of the days of Pliny, the fascinating subject has continued to attract an ever increasing circle of students, who have ever more earnestly endeavored to pierce the veil of mystery which surrounds it. Each fresh manifestation of subterranean energy is now watched with increased interest. Whenever possible, the sequence of events is noted with extreme detail, old theories become weakened, fresh ideas confirmed, and new avenues of thought open themselves to the earnest investigator at every step.

With the phenomena of earthquakes, those of volcanoes are closely linked, volcanic outbursts being frequently heralded and accompanied by earthquake shocks, and there can be little doubt that the two are most intimately bound up, if, indeed, they are not two effects arising from a single cause. This being so, the facts which surround the one class of phenomena may be drawn upon in attempting to frame an explanation whence and how either originates. That some portions of the earth's interior are in an immensely heated condition, the nature of the materials ejected from volcanic vents render evident, and observation has also clearly demonstrated the fact that the temperature increases from the surface of the earth downwards, the average increase being one degree Fahrenheit for every fifty feet of descent. Now, from consideration connected with the figure of the earth and the other members of the system to which it belongs, it has, with much probability, been inferred that the solar system has evolved from one of those glowing gaseous aggregations termed nebulæ, that "this world was once a fiery haze of light," and that when it first existed as an independent body it was in a state of the most fervent heat, a residue of which now gives rise to volcanic phenomena.

What happened then, as our earth radiated its primitive heat into space? The question is a vexed one. So many men, so many minds. One class of theorists, not giving sufficient weight to the fact that the increase of pressure towards the earth's center would tend to keep matter solid there under the influence of high temperatures, suppose that the process of radiation by the earth into space has, throughout the lapse of ages, resulted in the formation of a solid external crust covering a still fluid nucleus. But this class of theorists, by like the volcanoes of Britain, practically extinct, or at least as subdued and unpretending as the Suffolk earthquake. Other geologists, giving more weight to the fact of the increase of pressure towards the earth's center, consider that its condition is that of a body with a solid nucleus and a solid external crust, between which there still rests a residue of liquid matter.

In object on to both these views it has been shown that for the earth to maintain its rigidity under the moon's attraction, such a crust must be of enormous thickness, of so great a thickness, indeed, that Sir William Thomson, who investigated the matter, prefers to consider the earth as a solid globe rushing by contract on. On this view of the earth's condition, volcanic phenomena are explained as the result of the conversion into heat of the mechanical force of contraction; while earthquakes may themselves be regarded as proceeding from the crushing and bending of the rocks by the stress of contraction itself. Again, there are those who regard the earth as a globe mainly solid throughout, but with lakes of liquid matter in various parts near the surface, remnants of its former heat, and believe that it is from these lakes, as the earth continues to contract, that matter is forced into volcanic vents to feed their intermittent fires; whilst, looking at the fact that earthquakes so frequently precede an eruption, these earth tremors may from this point be regarded as ineffectual efforts by the pent-up subterranean forces to establish a volcanic outburst; and since the observations of Mr. Mallet in earthquake localities have demonstrated the fact that shocks emanate from centers near the earth's surface, being sometimes nearer, and sometimes further as the shocks are mainly horizontal or mainly vertical in character, there would seem to be some probability in this latter view of the origin of the subterranean forces, but there are many arguments which militate against its acceptance.

There are those also who, while they regard the matter of the earth as being in a molten condition, yet consider that some portions of it may be in a state of potential solidity, that is to say, ready to assume the solid form on a change of circumstances and when it is remembered that a barometric fall of [illegible] inches is an agency [illegible] of the earth's crust, as the weight of the superincumbent pressure of the earth's crust, as the weight of the superincumbent pressure of the earth's crust, as the weight of the superincumbent pressure

REMARKABLE BALLS.

Social Events That Have Left Their Impress Upon History.

If we are to place reliance on the novelists who have described the secret machinery of political events both in France and Italy, it is plain that from very early days down to times so recent as that of the second French Empire balls and the making of history are to be closely associated. There is at least one ball, however, which has an indisputable claim to be regarded as historical. We refer to the tragic festival at which Gustavus III., King of Sweden, was killed by Captain Ankarstrom. This gloomy event took place at a masked ball held in the opera house on March 16, 1792. The subject is one which has furnished materials for the operatic librettist and two well-known operas—one by Auber, the other by Verdi—have rendered the public familiar with the occurrences. It is needless to observe, however, that history has been a trifle perverted in order to meet the requirements of the lyric stage. Both in Gustave and the Ballo in Maschera love is made the pivot on which the tragedy turns, and the death of the King is ascribed to the vengeance of an injured lover and husband. In Verdi's beautiful work we have, indeed, the King of Sweden (under the stupid disguise of Richard, Duke of Boston), presented to us as a perjured friend and adulterer. Captain Ankerstrom, on the other hand, or Count Renato, as he is named in the opera, figures as a manly personage endowed with every virtue, whose crime positively appeals to sympathy. Though, of course, there is nothing in his story to show that Gustavus III. made love to Captain Ankarstrom's wife, or that the assassination of the King was connected with anything more than political motives, it is certain, nevertless, that Ankarstrom showed himself most eager to perform the foul deed. He was associated with three other conspirators, Ribbings, Horn and Pechlin, and begged hard that the task of putting an end to the King's life might be committed to him. The rest, however, insisted upon lots being drawn, and by a remarkable coincidence it fell to the man who was most anxious for the work to accomplish it. That Ankarstrom was animated by some powerful reason for hatred is sufficiently evident from the manner in which he met his subsequent fate. Though publicly flogged on three successive days, and condemned to death, he bore his punishment with unflinching courage and composure, and mounted the scaffold rejoicing.

A ball less terrible as regards circumstances connected with it, yet quite as well remembered, is that given by the Duchess of Richmond on the eve of the battle of Waterloo. This gathering took place at Brussels in the house in the Rue Royale nearest to the old Port de Schaerbeck, and was attended by the Duke of Wellington, who, though presenting on that occasion a cheerful countenance, knew alone of the merry throng assembled that the scene of gaiety, which he was beholding, would be speedily changed for one of fearful carnage and strife on the field of battle; the event celebrated in verse by Byron is, however, so familiar to all that more than the briefest allusion to it is unnecessary. In the gossipping pages of the diary of Samuel Pepys several accounts of remarkable balls are to be found. On one occasion it seems that the "Merry Monarch" startled his courtiers in the middle of their dancing by bundling Lady Gerard, wife of Charles, Lord Gerard of Brandon, out of the room. The lady, it appears, had displeased the sovereign by speaking ill of "my Lady Castlemaine" to the Queen and provoked in consequence a passionate outburst of anger on his part which led to her forcible expulsion. Other scandals are also related by Pepys, but they are of so gross a character that their reproduction in these columns would not be decorous. It was at a ball, if we are not mistaken, that Lord Townsend and Sir Robert Walpole proceeded to personal abuse, and seized each other by the collar. Macaulay tells us that "the women squalled and the men parted the combatants." By friendly intervention the scandal of a duel between cousins, brothers-in-law, old friends, and colleagues was prevented, but Lord Townsend after this naturally declined to form part of Walpole's ministry and retired to repose among his trees and pictures at Rainham. Among balls attended by out-of-the-way circumstances is to be included the Bal Masque given by Anderson, "the Wizard," at Covent Garden Theater in 1856. Scarcely had the ball come to an end when the theater was discovered to be in flames and was a few hours later completely destroyed.—Newcastle (Eng.) Chronicle.

Electric Eels.

A well-known scientific man, it is said, has given an order to a Liverpool dealer in such wares for a hundred specimens of the electric eel, for the purpose of studying its remarkable power of imparting a shock to anyone who is induced to handle its person. The London Standard thinks that when the depths of the sea and of the tropical lakes and rivers have been more fully explored, it will probably be found that the number of fishes furnished with batteries of the torpedo and Gymnotus type is much greater than is now supposed, for it falls in with no biological law or theory of evolution that a power so important should be reserved for a few favored members of unrelated families.

—A gardener named Croulebois, at Meudon, France, met with his death in a singular manner. He was knocking down nuts from a tree, and in order to aim with more certainty climbed into the tree and kept his face uplifted. A nut suddenly fell on the right eye and crushed it. He was immediately removed to the hospital, suffering intolerable agony. Excision of the eyeball was attempted, but found to be impossible. Cerebral congestion set in and the sufferer died.

EAU MIGH!

There was a young girl from Bordeaux
With corns on her little pink toeaux,
They gave her such pain
The tears ran like rain
Down the bridge of her delicate neaux

Her lover—a youth from Cologne—
Fled wildly and left her alogne
When he found that her feet
With corns were replete,
With never a word he had flogne.

They sent for a doctor from Lynn,
As shining and neat as a pyn.
He looked at her toeaux,
The source of her woeaux,
And indulged in a gratified groyn.

He prescribed for this maid from Bordeaux
And cured all her little pink toeaux;
And now, it is said,
They are well healed
And married from life with a groyn.

The sweet scented youth from Cologne,
Who left her severely alogne,
When he first heard the news
His mind he did lews,
And married from life with a groyn.

The first bottle relieved her very much, and the second bottle has absolutely cured her. She has not had so good health for thirty years." Trial bottles Free at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store. ONLY.

Only a flash of indignant eyes,
Only a glance of pained surprise,
Only a ring from a finger small
Dropped at his feet, and that was all.

Only a maiden sad and drear,
Longing for some one still held dear,
Only a tear on a ringless hand,
For the lover gone to a foreign land.

Only a ship by the sea waves tossed,
Only a man with hands idly crossed,
Sea below, and sky o'erhead,
With a bitter sigh for the love now dead.

Only an aching pain in his heart,
For the cruel words that made them part,
Only a wish to be back once more,
Down by her side as in days of yore.

Only a sight of a pure, pale face,
Sweet and grave in its womanly grace,
Only regret for the pain he had given
Only a prayer to be forgiven.

Only a glance in his tender eyes,
Only a smile of sweet surprise,
Only a clasp of the fingers small
Only a kiss—and that was all.

How They Meet and Part.

A gentleman lately took down verbatim the conversation of two fashionable ladies during a morning call—viz: "How do you do, dear?" "Pretty well, thank you." (They kiss.) "How have you been this age?" "Pretty well. How have you been?" "Very well, thank you." "Pleasant to-day." "Yes, very bright, but had a shower yesterday." "All your family quite well?" "Quite well, thanks. How is yours?" "Oh, very well thank you." "Have you seen Mary B. lately?" "No, but I have seen Susan." "You don't say so! is she quite well?" "Yes, very well, I believe." (Rising.) "Must you go?" "Yes, indeed; I have seven calls to make." "Do call again soon." "Thank you; but you don't come near me once in age." "Oh, you shouldn't say so, dear; I'm sure I'm very good." "Good bye." "Good bye, dear."—Exchange.

"Yes! and after writing that the gentleman discovered the strain upon his mental faculties had been so severe, he went out to 'brace up.' Just as he reached his destination, met a friend from out of town, when the following conversation was overheard and taken down by the writer, as an example for women, of men's "wit and wisdom." "Hellow! old fellow, how are you?" (They shake) "First rate, how are you?" "Tip-top! When dy'e get in?" "Just now." "Have something?" significantly.) "Well—yes, don't care if do." (They step into a saloon, after cautiously looking around, to make sure no outsiders are about, to see they are breaking their pledge—pause—they emerge, innocently wiping their mouths, before putting into them their lighted cigars, and being primed," resumed:) "How's yer folks?" "All well; how's yours?" "All flourishing now; youngest boy had diphtheria, but all right now." "Crops good up your way?" "Well, yes, pretty fair." How do politics look?" "Bad—very bad—all democrats up our way; big democratic majority. (Takes out his watch.) "Thunder! ten minutes to 12.—must be off—got to see a man at 12." "Can't you come up to the house and take dinner?" "No, guess not to-day—got several pressing business engagements. Good bye." "Good bye." They again wring hands, and then rush away from each other as if fearing they might have to stand another treat.

Pluck vs. Luck.

In an address delivered before the students of the Spencerian business college, Washington, D. C., June 29, 1869, among other things, Gen. James A. Garfield said:

"Now, young gentlemen, let me address you touching your success in life; and I hope the very brevity of my remarks will increase the chance of their making a lodgment in your minds. Let me beg you in the outset of your career, to dismiss from your minds all ideas of succeeding by luck. There is no more silly thought among young people than the foolish one that by-and-by something will turn up by which they will suddenly achieve fame or fortune. No, young gentlemen, things don't turn up in this world unless somebody turns them up. Inertia is one of the indispensable laws of matter, and things lie flat where they are until by some intelligent spirit (for nothing but spirit makes motion in this world) they are endowed with activity and life. Do not dream that some good luck is going to happen to you and give you a fortune. Luck is an ignis fatuus—you may follow it to ruin, but not to success. The great Napoleon, who believed in his destiny, followed it until he saw his star go down in blackest night, when the Old Guard perished around him, and Waterloo was lost. A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck.

Young men talk of trusting to the spur of the occasion. That trust is vain. Occasions cannot make spurs, young gentlemen. If you expect to wear spurs you must win them. If you wish to use them you must buckle them to your own heels before you go into the fight. The success you may achieve is not worth the having unless you fight for it. Whatever you win in life you must conquer by your own efforts, and then it is yours—a part of your self."

That Tired Feeling

When the weather grows warmer, that extreme tired feeling, want of appetite, dullness, languor, and lassitude, afflict almost the entire human family, and scrofula and other diseases caused by humors, manifest themselves with many. It is impossible to throw off this debility and expel humors from the blood without the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I could not sleep, and would get up in the morning with hardly life enough to get out of bed. I had no appetite, and my face would break out with pimples. I bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling, and my appetite improved." R. A. SANFORD, Kent, O.

ATKINS SOAP COMPANY.

TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

We appeal to the intelligence and good management required to save your strength and take this method to place in your hands an agent, which, with absolute safety to the fabric, will wash clothes with less work than any other in the world.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES WOMEN.
ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

Most of these reports were of an encouraging character, although some of them were quite brief.

THURSDAY MORNING.

The Presbytery held a business meeting this forenoon and it will probably continue during the entire afternoon of to-day—a report of these sessions is necessarily deferred until next week.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT APRIL 1, 1885.

For this report returns have been received from 878 correspondents representing 247 townships. Five hundred and ninety-five of these returns get from 48 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

At the beginning of winter the wheat plant was in a very satisfactory condition, and nothing has occurred during the winter to seriously injure it. From about the middle of January to the first of April the ground was well covered with snow. Very little, if any, wheat will be plowed up because winter-killed or otherwise destroyed. The reports of correspondents mailed to this department April 1st, show that the condition of wheat in the southern four tiers of counties was 104, and in the northern counties 102 per cent of condition April, 1884. At the time the reports were made probably not a field in the State was entirely bare of snow, and for this reason many of the correspondents made no answer to the questions relative to the condition of wheat.

A large number of special reports made since the snow melted off, and received the 7th, 8th, and 9th of the month, show the condition of wheat in the southern four tiers of counties to be 103, the comparison being with vitality and growth of average years. The present indications are clearly for a full average yield per acre. The present acreage as estimated in November is 1,474,059 acres, or about five per cent less than harvested in 1884.

Only 3 per cent of the acreage in clover is believed to be winter-killed, and the condition of that portion not winter-killed is 99 per cent of condition one year ago. In condition horses are 98, cattle 95, sheep 94, and swine 96 per cent, the comparison being with stock in good, healthy, and thrifty condition. About seven-tenths of an average crop of apples is hoped for.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of March at 194 elevators and mills. Of these 177 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is thirty-seven per cent of the whole number of elevators and mills in these counties. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 306,808 of which 114,085 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties, 92,132 bushels in the second tier, [illegible] bushels in the third tier, 38,196 bushels in the fourth tier, and 13,727 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. At 83 elevators and mills, or 16 per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, there was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels reported in the seven months, August-March, is 7,100,266. This is 28 per cent of the crop of 1884. In April, 1884, 34 per cent of the 1883 crop had been reported marketed.

MUCH FOR LITTLE.

In this age when the events of yesterday in all parts of the world are found in to-day's paper, when tidings of a battle in Egypt or China are flashed across seas and laid at our door before its smoke is dissipated, it is necessary for well-informed people to have access to reliable maps. Not all can afford the heavy library atlases, and even they are often found untrustworthy unless a new copy is purchased as often as revised.

If you want an atlas, small enough for general use, full enough for nearly every purpose, critically accurate and up to date, we recommend the new Handy Atlas of the World, published by Messrs. Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor, & Co., 753 and 755 Broadway, New York, which is both a credit to them and to the American press. It is bound in flexible cloth, contains 38 beautifully colored maps and important statistics. Among its many notable good things are maps showing standard time, the railways of the United States, recent polar expeditions, Central Africa as explored by Stanley, the seat of the Egyptian war, Bible Lands, and our principal American cities. If your bookseller does not have this excellent work, send fifty cents direct to the publishers and receive it by return mail.

The May number of Harper's promises to be very strong in its stories. Miss Woolson's story of "East Angels" grows in the strength of its study of characters as well as in interest as it proceeds and "At the Red Grove," the anonymous story, illustrated from sketches made at Berne, the scene of the story, by Mr. Reinhart, draws to its close. The short stories include "Constance Royal," a strongly dramatic story, told in three pages, by Jeanie Spring Peet; a humorous love story set forth in "Passages from the Diary of a Hong Kong Merchant," by F. J. Stimson ("J. S. of Dale"), and a charming story by Lucy C. Lillie, with a full-page illustration by C. D. Weldon.

Honesty is the best policy and Hall's Catarrh Cure is an honest medicine, hence its success. Sold by C. A. Wright & Co.

GEN. JOHN CHAS. BLACK.

Gen. J. C. Black was nominated March 6, 1885, as Commissioner of Pensions, being the first Democrat ever named for that office. The Black family were among the earliest settlers in Pennsylvania and Gen. Black's father was born and bred in that State. Gen. Black, however, was born in Lexington, Mississippi, Jan. 27th, 1839, his father having removed to that state on account of his failing health. At the age of eight young Black with his mother located at Danville, Ill., and has resided there ever since, with the exception of eight years, from 1867 to 1875, when he lived in Champaign, Ill. He received the advantages of a classical education, which however was obtained through his energy in working at odd jobs in the intervals of his studies. In 1861 he enlisted in the Thirty Seventh Illinois Regiment, and was mustered out August 15th 1865 as a Brevet Brigadier General. He was wounded at the battles of Pea Ridge and Prairie Grove, in the former battle so severely as to cripple his left arm. On leaving the army he took up the study of law in Chicago and in 1867 commenced practice, continuing the same until his appointment as Commissioner of Pensions. Mr. Black for eighteen years has been an active Democrat and was on three occasions a candidate for Congress, but his district being strongly Republican, he was defeated each time. In 1872 he ran on a fusion ticket for Lieutenant Governor, and was the nominee of the Democratic caucus for the United States Senatorship in 1879. He declined to be a candidate for Governor at the Peoria convention in 1884, and although his name was most prominently mentioned in Democratic circles for the vice-presidency on the ticket with Cleveland, he refused to allow his friends to consider him a candidate. He never held a public office of profit, although he has been connected, as an officer with many charitable institutions. He is a member of the "Board of Trustees of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers." As a lawyer Mr. Black stands confessedly at the head of his profession. Not only is he renowned for his great erudition, but he is one of the ablest speakers of his state. As a political speaker he has few equals and therefore his services have always been in demand at election times. Upon the advent of the Democrats into national power, Mr. Black's name was the first to be sent to the Senate for confirmation after the Cabinet had been installed. In the great contest between the Republicans and Democrats in the Illinois Legislature for the United States Senatorship Mr. Black was one of the prominent men offered as a compromise candidate.

Harper's Magazine for April is a brilliant number, with sixty-eight illustrations, and an unusual variety of exceedingly interesting reading matter. The frontispiece of the number is a characteristic portrait of Abraham Lincoln, from a photograph taken before he became President. Mr. Wendell Phillips Garrison, who is the owner of this photograph, contributes a poem entitled "The Vision of Abraham Lincoln, April 14, 1865." The most important of the illustrated articles is a personal sketch of the Prince of Wales, by Wm. Howard Russell, superbly illustrated. The long-promised series of Baltic sketches by F. D. Millet is begun in this number under the title of "A Wild Goose Chase," characteristicly illustrated from drawings by the author and R. Swain Gifford. Miss Woolson's new novel, "East Angels," increases in interest with each installment, and the anonymous story, "At the Red Grove," illustrated by C. S. Reinhart, is exceptionally bright and entertaining.—Mr. Charles Dudley Warner opens the Editor's Drawer with an essay, in his happiest style, on "Climate and Intellect." All the editorial departments are well sustained, and the entire number—in letter-press and illustrations—is one of the most attractive ever issued.

FRED. B. WOOD.

April fool jokes are not wholly a bad thing, as a Lawrence, Mass., man found, who lost on the street a pocketbook containing $42. Several passers-by winked knowingly at each other and carefully let it alone, so that when the owner retraced his steps half an hour later he found it just where he had dropped it.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire to publicly express our heartfelt thanks to our friends in Tecumseh and Franklin, for their sympathy in our recent affliction. Their assistance in the hour of need and sorrow will ever be cherished in memory.

MR. & MRS. R. W. LANGDON.

A CARD OF THANKS.

Upon the eve of my departure for Florida, I wish to extend to the citizens of Tecumseh and neighboring towns, and especially to the farmers with whom I have had business deal, my sincere thanks for their business friendship and uniform kindness to me during my residence here. I leave the old home with regret, and shall always cherish in fond remembrance the happy and successful years I have passed in Tecumseh.

FRANK BUMANY.

RINK RACKET.

There is a young man in this city
Who thinks himself quite smart and witty,
When he goes to the rink,
The people all wink,
And say, Oh! how dashing and pretty.

This young man gives his talented views
In the local inclange of the "News."
He aspires to be poet,
The "Rinkisms" show it,
It's enough to give people the blues.

Although he writes rhyme like a streak,
For a respite on Sunday, he'll seek
A Hunt-ers repose
In his best May-day clothes,
And leave himself up for the week.

Miss May Hunt, of Manchester, visited the rink last Saturday afternoon. She returned home on the night train.

The genial countenance of George Hollister will be missed in the future. He has moved on his farm in Raisin.

It isn't often that the rink is honored with a bran new bride and groom and we think it is worth mentioning when it is. It was Tuesday afternoon, and the parties were Mr. & Mrs. Harry Woodworth, of Mason, who were married that afternoon.

The hat carnival next Tuesday evening will be the first one ever had in this village, and a big time is expected. There will be four prizes given—one for the tallest, shortest, handsomest and homliest, and will be one months admission to the rink free to each of the four.

The one mile race last Tuesday evening resulted in a foul. Heesen got the lead in the start but was overhauled in the third lap by Mont, who kept it for a half a dozen laps when he was passed. He succeeded in getting in front again and kept there until within a few feet of the finish when Heesen made a spurt and passed him, coming in a few feet ahead, but in so doing he knocked young Mont down. Whether it was done with his hands or accidentally was a hard question to decide, but after deliberating some time the judge decided in the former and the race was a draw. It will be skated over again at some future date.

"A New York preacher has threatened to expel members of his church who visit the skating rink. And yet there is nothing will bring a man on his knees so quickly as a pair of roller skates," says an exchange. Well, perhaps; but that is not the way they fall here.—Boston Post.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD,

TECUMSEH, MICH., APR. 16, 1885.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

The woodchuck must go.

Wheat has gone up, which makes the farmers feel happy.

C. P. Hopkins returned to Battle Creek the last of the week.

Miss Lulu Tefft returned last week from her visit to Cleveland.

The boys in Rome feel badly because no woodchuck bounty was offered in their township.

Mr. Crowel Eddy of Franklin, has gone to Iowa to spend the summer where his four sons reside.

Mr. C. E. Hewitt, salesman for the paper house of Barnes Brothers of Detroit, was in town Tuesday.

James E. Carr, of the Dundee Reporter, was in town last Monday and made the HERALD a friendly call.

Will Ford has opened a paint shop over Albert Hyde's wagon shop where he will be pleased to see all his friends.

Last Saturday proved to be rather a dismal "Arbor Day." The man who planted trees needed buckskin mittens on and a crowbar to dig the hole with.

The Adrian Record man calls it "alcoholic hilarity." That is a very esthetic and suggestive term, we admit, but we prefer the word bewilderment.

Gus Slayton sold his house near the mill to R. L. Robinson. He has two more to sell on monthly payments, one for $8 per month and one for $10 per month.

The Universalists will hold services at their church next Sunday, both morning and evening, at the usual hours. Preaching by Rev. J. M. Getchell of Norwalk, Ohio.

Lyman Thorpe is at home for a few days visit. He is still selling his patent apple corer and meeting with good success. He finds it a congenial and profitable business.

N. B. Bradley of Bay City has been in town a day or two looking after his interests in the Tecumseh Lumber Co. He speaks in flattering terms of J. H. Smith's ability as manager.

Misses Kirkland have opened dressmaking rooms in the second story of Miss Hough's millinery store, and are prepared to do all kinds of work in their line, neatly and cheaply. We bespeak for them a liberal patronage.

Last Monday morning H. E. Anderson discovered in a bunch of bananas he received on Saturday, a mammoth spider. It is probably a species of tarantula, and its discovery made things lively in that store for a while. It has been properly caged in a glass fruit jar and is now on exhibition.

A friend of ours takes exceptions to our statement in last week's HERALD, in giving the result of the election in this township, that the prohibitionists endorsed the republican candidate. Perhaps the languge was susceptible of that construction, but the actual fact was the reverse of this: the republicans endorsed the prohibition candidate.

Adrian Record: On election night a Fairfield voter on his way home with the consciousness of a man who has discharged his full duty, discovered fire issuing from the second floor of Fuller's grist mill. He turned about and gave the alarm, the other American sovereigns, not yet dispersed, organized a fire department, and the flames were speedily squelched.

Mr. Fred Hathaway of Addison was in town last Monday, and stopped here on his way home from a brief visit at Raisin Valley Seminary. Fred has been engaged as one of the instructors at the Seminary, for next year and will assume his position next September. We believe he has the elements of a first class teacher and predict his success in that calling.

"Beloved brethren," remarked a country minister at the close of his sermon, "among the pennies and two-cent pieces of last Sabbath's collection I was surprised to find a gold coin of considerable value. As there were no strangers in the congregation it was evidently put there by mistake. By applying to the treasurer and proving property the owner can recover his money. Let us unite in prayer."

Frank Buman started for Florida yesterday to take up his residence upon his own orange plantation at Sorrento, and if the climate agrees with him he will make Florida his permanent home hereafter. Frank has for many years filled a prominent place in the roll of our enterprising business men, and we sincerely regret his departure. May good health and good fortune smile upon him in the land of flowers.

Alba Heywood was greeted with a crowded house last Saturday evening, and the audience was more than satisfied. Of Mr. Heywoods impersonations, it is unnecessary to speak. He fully sustained his previous reputation in that line, and added new friends to his large circle of admirers in Tecumseh. Mr. Davis executed some fine music upon the flute, and Mr. Parks proved himself to be an adept with the xylophone. The program was excellent throughout.

Blissfield expects to have a roller flouring mill soon.

Where were the Michigan mugwumps on town meeting day?

H. T. Mathews was down from Muskegon on a short visit last week.

Stella Cleveland spent three days last week visiting friends in Dundee.

The advent of spring poetry is postponed this year on account of the weather.

The Hubbard Voice culture Company have organized a class of 150 members at Hudson.

J. N. Satterthwaite of this village represented Tecumseh on the county board of canvassers.

Old papers, suitable for covering pantry shelves, putting under carpets etc., for sale at this office.

A. J. Coddington has bought his partner's interest in the Shelby Enterprise and now owns the entire property.

Postmaster Stearns, of Blissfield, owned eighty-colonies of bees last fall. Only thirteen of them survived the winter.

Bohemian oats have a rival in the "great American corn" scheme, which is being worked in some of the southern counties of this State.

Mrs. H. J. Betts, of Edmore, Mich., arrived in Tecumseh on Tuesday evening last, and will make a long visit at her father's, Wm. Bresie's.

We had the pleasure of shaking hands with our old friend, Dr. H. Peters yesterday. He was a delegate from Blissfield to the Presbytery.

The county canvassers met at Adrian last Tuesday. Danforth Keyes, of Clinton, was elected chairman of the board, and Jay Santus, of Ridgeway, clerk.

Early risers are now rewarded by a glimpse of the "Star of Bethlehem," which can be seen in the eastward at 3 o'clock A. M. It will not be visible again for 300 years.

The Morenci Observer says there is a workingman in that village, with a wife and two children, who receives $30 per month and has saved $100 in five months. An itemized statement of the family expenses would be of interest to most housekeepers.

Muskegon News: Mr. J. H. Smith, manager of the Tecumseh (Mich.) Lumber Co., was in the city yesterday, and contracted for a large bill of lumber to be shipped over the Michigan & Ohio R. R. to Devil's Lake. The lake above mentioned is destined to be a popular summer resort, as it is a beautiful sheet of water.

East Jordan Enterprise: A genius has invented a cushion with a spiral spring; to be worn by skaters where it will do the most good. When a skater who wears one of these contrivances sits down unexpectedly and in italics, as it were, the spring throws him right on his feet again before he is fully aware that there has been an accident.

Addison Courier: The cry of fire was sounded in our quiet little village Wednesday forenoon. The livery barn of Wolson & Bryant was discovered to be on fire, and the people rushed to the scene and soon extinguished the flames. No damage of any account was done. Wouldn't it be a good idea to buy a small hand engine to protect our property?

Fowler & Conn of this village have the state agency for a new patent refrigerator sideboard cupboard, which is undoubtedly the best thing of the kind that has ever been put on the market. It is a refrigerator, sideboard, cupboard and cabinet combined in one, is a handsome article of furniture and has many improvements over the old style of refrigerator. Agents wanted. Address for circulars etc., Fowler & Conn, box 536, Tecumseh, Mich.

Last Saturday, in honor of Albert Brewer's birthday, the office of H. Brewer & Co., was adorned with a beautiful oil portrait of Horace Brewer, the founder of the firm. It was a gift from H. E. Stout, and was executed by C. H. Hopkins. The likeness is a very natural one, the features most life like, and the work finely done. Horace Brewer's memory is warmly cherished by all who knew him, and this gift by one of his former workmen will be highly prized by the members of the present firm.

W. B. Keyser, who has been suffering from an attack of paralysis for two or three weeks, was in town last Saturday shaking hands with his friends. We are glad to see "Wes" out again, but are afraid that he is getting to be a chronic office seeker. He is school inspector of Clinton, Assessor of his school district, Treasurer of the Commercial Telegraph Co., Secretary of the slumbering fair association, and was elected at the last town meeting as Justice of the Peace of Clinton. However, in all these cases, the office sought the man. We are glad to note that since his election as Justice he has been rapidly improving.

Harry Snell was in town last Sunday.

Mrs. Fred H. Burlingame is visiting relatives in Coldwater.

The new Adrian city building is called the "Chinese pagoda."

Jesse Potter, of Britton, was in town over Sunday visiting his parents.

The Supreme Court has granted a writ of mandamus against the City of Adrian to show cause why it should not pay rent for water from July, 1884, to January, 1885. The writ has not yet been served. The City Council has decided to employ counsel to assist the City Attorney, and when the papers are served the showing will be promptly made, and it will be simply that the company has never fulfilled the contract in any respect, has never made a test that the contract requires or that the Council has accepted, and that the water is neither sufficient nor wholesome. Aside from this the works were not completed for a test until long after the time allotted had expired.

Adrian Times: Horace T. Treat is a farmer who lives in Wright township, Hillsdale county. He is a democrat. He has a neighbor, Nelson Masters, who is a republican. During the campaign of last fall the two neighbors made a friendly wager, the republican agreeing to give a sheep to the democrat, in case of Cleveland's election, the latter to cook the mutton and invite in the neighbors. A reverse bargain was made in the case of Blaine's election. Mr. Masters duly presented the sheep to his neighbor on Wednesday last, and on Thursday there was a sheep roast, in which about 125 of the friends and neighbors participated. The affair ended with a dance, and it will long be remembered with pleasure by all who participated, among whom were some friends from this section.

SOMEWHAT SARCASTICAL.

A former resident of Tecumseh now residing at Cleveland, Tenn., in a friendly letter to an acquaintance here says: "The people here are law abiding, unpretentious, honest, and I will add progressive. It is a felony in this state for any person to carry a pistol or offer one for sale, while the lax laws of Michigan place a revolver in the hands of every school boy. I fear many of the Michigan folks are degenerating and becoming "cranks." When I left, there were two Medical Colleges in Michigan—one at Ann Arbor and the other at Detroit—and both required two years attendance. Now all a young man has to do to become an M. D. is to pay the county clerk a fee of fifty cents. I see your wise legislature have made a registration law for doctors and dogs. Why don't they make other animals register? A dog has to pay a dollar for being a dog, and a man has to pay fifty cents for being a physician in the great State of Michigan. I regret to hear of the hard times in Michigan. I hear no complaint of hard times here. There are but eleven paupers besides myself in this entire county.

EIGHT YEARS ON THE OULD SOD.

Mr. Elliot Gray has got settled down in his old home again and his smiling countenance is daily seen in town. Mr. Gray dropped into the HERALD office last Monday, and we enjoyed a short chat with him in regard to his residence in Ireland.

"My wife left home eleven years ago on the 14th day of February for Ireland, to assist in the care of an aged aunt, and has been there ever since until our departure for America last month. This relation died last fall at the advanced age of 104 years, and after getting the business of her estate in process of settlement we returned home.

Eight years ago, this spring I first visited the "Ould Sod," and remained there most of my time since, although I have taken a flying trip home about once a year. During that time I have crossed the Atlantic eighteen times, so I flatter myself that I have become quite a sea faring man. I enjoy an ocean voyage very much as I am never troubled with sea sickness. I have generally taken passage on the Inman Line, although occasionally I try some other steamers.

The many things you see in print in praise of Ireland are not exaggerated in the least. It is a beautiful country. Owing to the climatic effects of the gulf stream, the temperature is milder than it is in the same latitude here. The winters are comparatively warm and the summers cool. Snow is rarely seen. Only twice during my residence there did we have sleighing and then only for two or three days. Ploughing had begun and the potato crop was being planted two weeks before I started for home last month.

The Irish are a very hospitable generous hearted people, but strong in their likes and dislikes. They are warm friends to those they like and just as warm enemies to those they hate. Their hatred of Johnny Bull is proverbial and this enmity will continue until Ireland becomes free.

I suppose you have heard a good deal about Irish whiskey and the drinking habits of the people. Well, I do not care to say much on that subject, but I can say this, that Irish whiskey is very pure liquor, and that it is used very generally by all classes of people. There is but little drunkenness however. People use it in their homes, the same as we do tea and coffee and cider, and it is rarely taken to excess.

During my residence there I was not idle, but improved my time in a business point of view. I engaged in selling flour on commission, and worked up a fine traffic. I have sold flour for the Tecumseh Millers, for other Michigan mills and for several big firms at Minneapolis. I have regular customers now at Dublin, Belfast, Sligo, Cork, Inniskillin and several other large towns in Ireland. I find the business both agreeable and profitable and shall undoubtedly continue it.

Although I enjoyed my stay in Ireland, I am glad to get home again. After all, I know of no better "neck of the woods" for a permanent home than Southern Michigan. My property and all my friends are in Tecumseh. My interests are here, and here I intend to spend the rest of my life. Whenever I can be instrumental in my humble way, in advancing the business prosperity of Tecumseh, you will find me ready and willing to do my share".

The following letter received by Mr. Gray, on the eve of his departure from Sligo, from a fine "old Irish Gentleman," shows the esteem in which he was held by his Irish acquaintances. The letter is a memento which the major will think worth preserving.

SLIGO, March 23, 1885.

DEAR MAJOR GRAY:—I beg to express the regret I feel at your leaving Sligo, where by your gentlemanly conduct and kindness of disposition, you have endeared yourself to all classes and creeds. You were amongst us at a time of great agitation and trouble, yet by your sound judgment and good sense, you identified yourself with no party. You are now returning to your own country United States of America which you love so well, and in bidding you farewell, I wish you and yours a prosperous voyage, and a long life, and happiness in your home. Believe me ever very sincerely yours,

T. ROSS,
Co. Inspt. Royal Irish Const.

MAJOR GRAY, U. S. A.

A broken rail on the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern Railroad, caused two coaches loaded with passengers, to leave the track about six miles north of Milan, one day last week. After leaving the track, the coaches were turned over and dragged about ten rods on their sides. J. B. Conners, trainmaster, and H. Z. Smith, road master, were badly hurt. Three ladies, a child and four men were badly hurt. It is thought that Mrs. Clute, of Dundee, Mich., who was injured on the hip, will not recover. The track was blocked all day, and all trains were delayed.

N. Atherton, for the past seven years with H. C. Wason & Co. of Toledo, has entered the employ of the Tecumseh Lumber Co., as assistant to J. H. Smith. Mr. Atherton is a good business man and a genial gentlemen, and we commend him to the public. He and manager Smith will make a strong team.

C. V. Hicks' "An Sable Drug Store" was burglarized Sunday night to the amount of $50 in goods and money.—All the change in the money drawer was taken. About $23 was left in a writing desk by the proprietor. The burglar attempted to pry up the top with an ax, but failed, and went away leaving the money, which he could have secured by pulling out the unlocked drawer.

Miss Hattie Montgomery left here on Monday to attend college at Albion. On Friday evening, April 10, a number of her friends assembled at the residence of Rev. G. D. Perry and gave her a reception. Refreshments were served and Hattie was presented with a nice teacher's Bible and a copy of Gospel Hymns. The good wishes of her many friends go with her to her new field of work.

Henry W. Langdon, of Franklin, came to Tecumseh with his daughter last Friday and called at Dr. House's office to procure medical treatment for the daughter. Mr. Langdon seemed to be in his usual health. After taking a chair from the doctor and seating himself he suddenly expired. There was no cause for his death, as he had not been complaining. He was an old pioneer of the county, having lived for over fifty years on his farm a mile and a half north of Franklin Center. He was eighty-three years old, and was highly respected by his neighbors.

"Times are hard, money is scarce, business is dull, retrenchment is a duty—please stop my—beer? Oh, no! times are not hard enough for that yet. But there is something else that costs me a large amount which I wish to save. Please stop my—tobacco cigars and snuff? Oh, no, not these but I want to retrench somewhere. Please stop my—ribbons, jewels, ornaments and trinkets? Not at all; pride must be fostered, if times are hard but I can see a way of saving in another direction. Please stop my—tea, coffee? No, no not these. Ah, I have it now, my—my paper: that will take me through the panic easily. I believe in retrenchment and economy, of—brains.

Another Clear and Positive Recovery—An Elderly Lady's Letter.

Among the numerous letters received by Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y., the following will be found of unusual interest, not only on account of the severity of the disease from which the writer suffered, but also because it shows the perfect adaptability of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy to the needs of the public. Read the letter:

WORCESTER, Mass., March 25, 1881.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Until recently I have been for three years without hair upon my head. It followed upon an attack of Erysipelas for which I was a long time under medical treatment. I lost my health and I lost no doubt, all that could be lost, but I did not lose hope, for I had faith in your advertisement, and I began to hear that it would prove good of it.

By the use of two bottles of your excellent medicine, which I was induced to try by the favorable reports which I read, it would scarcely be one good. I used it, and within a much shorter time than I would have believed possible, I received a permanent cure. I am perfectly free from Salt Rheum. What a blessing! What a comfort it gives my wife! Her gratitude is as great as mine. You may, if you think proper, use my name in any way you may deem best. I keep it you constantly in the same as a family medicine. Yours truly,

MRS. DINAH PHAIR.

Mrs. Phair sometimes shows what on a visit to Worcester, to take a case of Salt Rheum, could not get Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, sent to New York City for her. Such cures speak for themselves.

THE CONTRIBUTION BOX.

It Makes a Confession and Gives a Few Pretenders Away.

"My friends," said the contribution box, in a hollow voice, "my time is well-nigh spent, and I shan't be with you many days. I have lived a correct life and have always taken care of myself, and though to be sure I have been around a good deal, I never got full. But the lining of my stomach is all worn out, my joints are out of kilter, and I feel sometimes as though actually falling to pieces. However, I might have kept up and about awhile longer hadn't the sexton broken my arm trying to strike a mouse with me the other evening in the vestry. That mouse, the poor thing!—it was a church mouse, you know—escaped a box on the ear," added the contribution box, with a ghastly attempt at facetiousness; "but the shock was too much for me. My arm was broken short off, and when the sexton, instead of apologizing, called me a cross-grained old thing, my heart was broken too, I really believe.

"Well, well!" continued the contribution box, after a pause, "I've seen a good deal in my time, and it may not be wholly unprofitable for you to hear some of my experiences. I have been a close observer all my life, and I think I know something about human nature. It was always very amusing to me, when I passed beneath the noses of the people in the pews, to watch the varied expressions on the faces above me. There was old Mrs. Gubbon, for example. She was the widest awake woman you ever saw on ordinary occasions; but when I came around she was always fast asleep—or pretended to be—and, though I often gave her a good, hearty nudge, it never amounted to anything; she never so much as quivered, but sat as immovable as a marble statue, with her eyes as close shut as the jaws of a sprung bear-trap. I did catch her once, however, by returning unexpectedly to her pew, after having passed it. Her eyes were wide open, but as soon as she saw me she looked up toward the ceiling with a heavenly expression, as though lost in pious meditation. I stayed as long as I dared, but it was no use. Her eyes never quit the rafters, and I had to give it up and move on.

"Then there was Grabemall, the rich contractor. It almost made me split my sides sometimes to see the ostentatious way in which he would drop a nickel into my pouch. I knew, of course, just how much he contributed; but everybody else supposed, from the air of careless prodigality which he put on, that he had given five dollars, at least. How different his manner was from that of Widow Goode, who sat just behind him! She never gave less than a dollar. I knew she couldn't afford it, and it almost made me feel like a thief to take it from her. She used to slyp the money into my pocket, as though she were doing something wicked, and were ashamed to let anybody know it.

"The young ladies would hold out a dime in their delicate gloved fingers with a sanctimonious air, and then just as likely as not giggle right in my face, though I never could understand what they saw to laugh at; the children would throw their great noisy pennies into my pocket with a jolly eagerness that was quite refreshing, but I must own that I went away from their pews oftentimes with a very heavy heart, and feeling quite cheap, notwithstanding their plentiful donations; and there was one family of boys—the little rascals!—who used to put lozenges into my pocket. I afterward found out that their mother gave them ten cents apiece, and they used to buy candy with it and feed me with sweetmeats. But perhaps the young scamps were not really so bad, after all. Possibly they thought the little heathen children might like a little candy now and then as well as themselves.

"I have noticed that people like to sit behind the man who gave a dollar bill. They all of them always gave something—and I have been so uncharitable as to think that they wanted to have it seem to the pews back of them that it was they who contributed the dollar, and not the little bald-headed man in the front seat. I suppose one reason why I got this idea into my head was because when the first pew gave only a small piece of money, I wouldn't receive another cent in the whole aisle; as though, so I fancied, everybody was afraid to give himself away, as they say nowadays.

"I used to smile when the deacon who carried me around would stand up before the whole congregation and throw a handful of coin into my pocket. Everybody got the impression that the good deacon was a very benevolent gentleman, and I more than half believe that he thought so himself. His face looked like a horn of plenty, and he gave the money in such an abstracted manner that, though nobody could fail to see the operation, everybody must have thought that he was quite oblivious to anyone's presence. But between you and me, the deacon never put in any money—not a cent, I assure you. When he went to church he always had a lot of tin disks. Of course, they were always discovered when the money was counted, but everybody laid it to the boys up in the gallery. However, the deacon's contribution did a power of good, not so much for its intrinsic worth as from the beautiful example it afforded to others. If the deacon could be so liberal, others felt as though they could give generously also. There's nothing so potent in this world, after all, as a good example.

"I couldn't begin to tell you all the queer things I've seen," continued the contribution box. "Some folks who I knew hadn't paid their butcher for six months would give liberally, and others who were worth no end of money would hold out a ten cent piece and let go of it with great reluctance and with a sigh and a shudder that were quite saddening. But the meanest man I ever knew was a well-dressed chap whom I detected more than once putting in a dime and taking out a quarter. I never passed him unnoticed, and he was generally considered one of the main supports of the church, but I could have told a quite different story."

The contribution box stopped speaking for a moment, as if overcome by the recollection of its manifold wrongs, and then I resumed my seat and went to sleep.

MARRIAGE IN OMAHA.

Nuptial Ceremonies Among the Aristocracy of Nebraska.

"Omaha is a city of young people, and most of the young people are married fast—fast as the Mohammedan law can bind. And, theoretically, as yet they have never seen each other's faces. But really Housekeeper has had many a glimpse of the fair Nissa. Her mother has often allowed him to see her child from behind a curtain or a cupboard door. All this is understood. And the young people are now legally married. The wedding, as distinct from the espousals, may take place the same evening, a week, a month, or not for years, according to the age, rank, or circumstances of the bride and bridegroom. Men and women feast separately; and after many water-pipes have been smoked, many pounds of sweetmeats consumed, and a plentiful banquet has been disposed of, the guests separate. All promise to be present at the actual wedding. No music, no rejoicings—nothing but what we have described is seen at the ceremony we have detailed.—St. James' Gazette.

AMERICAN TOWNS.

A Chance For Improvement in Their Nomenclature.

David Dudley Field has been showing himself to be a man of good taste and judgment by remarks he made in a recent lecture on the names of American towns. Mr. Field objected to the manner in which many places in the United States have been christened. The natural supposition, he thinks, would be that the names were selected by a half civilized people. He pities the unhappy lot of the inhabitants of villages afflicted with such names as You Bet, Pop Corn, Wild Cat, Cut Shin, Big Coon, Toad Vine, Black Jack, Skunk Lake, Buzzard Roost, Cat Creek, Dirt Town, Doctor Town, Jug Tavern, Cow Skin, and Cut Off, all of which he found in the list of names in a railway guide.

Such names are certainly bad enough. They are striking instances of absurd nomenclature because of their grotesque singularity. But they are not such violations of good taste as can be found among the pretentious towns of New York. When one goes among the Romes, Troys, Utcas, Syracuses, Ithacas and the many other classical names that renders the map of that State ridiculous, he feels that he could go a considerable distance out of his road to kick the pedants who named them.

Of all names given to towns, that of Rome, an imitation of the eternal city, is the most inappropriate and absurd. There can be but one Rome. To name applied to any other town or city is a ridiculous affectation and conceit. The New York Rome through the pedantry of its founders missed an appropriate name, and one of which its citizens would be proud, in not being called Fort Stanwix, a designation similar to that of Fort Wayne, which would have associated it with an interesting revolutionary event that happened in that locality. Utica, which as a matter of taste is almost as shocking a name to be imitated as that of Rome, would not today be a blemish to the map of New York if its founder would have had good taste and sense enough to have adopted the term Oneida, which is appropriate to the neighborhood. There is only one other name as applied to a modern town, and particularly to an insignificant town, that is pedantically as bad as Rome, and that is Athens. The nomenclature of places in this country is generally bad, but nowhere else equal in that respect to New York, where the idea seems to have prevailed that stilted titles taken from a classical dictionary were just the thing.

Mr. Fields recommends Indian names. They certainly have the advantage in point of originality, but many of them are barbarous in sound and almost unpronounceable, which is clearly objectionable in the name of a town. This is especially the case with the New England Indian names. Father Wells made a nice mess of it when he christened the ships of the navy after them during the war, making the list of the National vessels such a barbarous jargon that it was enough, in connection with Republican management, to ruin that branch of the National defense.

Mr. Fields very properly objects to "ville" at the end of the name of a town. There is an unreasonable prejudice against the word "town," and a mistaken notion that the substitution of "ville" for it is an improvement. This is an error of taste as well as of judgment. "Town" is an expressive, euphonious and very suitable term. "Jonestown" sounds better than "Jonesville." There is more ring in it, and it is divested of the absurdity of attempting to ornament a very common name with a French termination.

A new horror that is springing up in town nomenclature is the use of the term "city" as applied to insignificant places. It is the offspring of ignorance, conceit and bad taste. The Post-office Department when asked to use it in naming post-offices should sternly put its foot down on the monstrosity. What could be more absurd than Smith City?

It is about time that a movement should be made for reform in the application of names to the towns of this country. The Post-office Department could do much good in this matter. As the town nomenclature now stands it is a disorderly collection of incongruous names ranging from Red Dog to Rome, making a map of the country as ludicrous as a comic almanac. A wide field for improvement in this respect is opened, which should be no longer neglected.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot

A HELPLESS MAN HELPED.

At Greencastle, Indiana, an hour's ride from Indianapolis, lives Mr. D. L. Southard, a gentleman, well known throughout Indiana. Among other honorable positions which he holds is that of Trustee of the De Pauw University. Mr. Southard is a brother-in-law of Bishop Bowman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

For many years Mr. Southard was a martyr to rheumatism in its most afflictive form. Up to July, 1883, he was nearly helpless, and could move only with great pain. At that time Bishop Bowman, having seen how greatly the Rev. Mr. Keely, of Indianapolis, had been relieved by the new remedy, Athlophoros, brought Mr. Southard a bottle of that medicine, and advised him to try it.

Mr. Southard's experience, resulting from his trial of Athlophoros, was thus stated at a recent interview. Bishop Bowman happened to be visiting Mr. Southard at the time, and the exchange of ideas and opinions as to rheumatism and the radical remedy for it, was free and pleasant.

Said Mr. Southard: "I had for years been suffering with rheumatic pains. My arms and legs were swollen, and the pain was sharp and constant. I was unable to dress myself, or even to put on my stockings. My wife had to lift me and turn me in bed. Bishop Bowman brought me a bottle of Athlophoros. I hardly dared to hope for any benefit from it, for I had taken so many medicines.

"I began to take the Athlophoros first as directed. At that time I was suffering frightful pain. In a few hours there was a remarkable change. I broke out into a profuse perspiration, and had a strange feeling of relief. In a few hours more all my pain was gone. I could stretch my legs and move my joints as I had not been able to for a long time. It seemed wonderful, after all my experience, that any medicine could have such effects. I feared that this was of such power that it would go to my vital parts and end my life. Knowing not what might be the result, I quietly prepared myself for the final change and calmly awaited it. But instead of putting an end to me the Athlophoros only put an end to the pain. What a new and delightful experience it was to be without pain!

"I gave a letter to the Athlophoros concern, which was published. It brought me a great many inquiries by mail from various parts of the country. I wish I could show you some of those letters, but I was clearing out my desk the other day, and I destroyed the whole pile of them. One was from a man in Winchester, Indiana, whose wife was suffering agony. I directed him where to get the medicine and it soon made her well. The wife of Prof. Gobin, of the University, was suffering with rheumatism, and Athlophoros cured her, as well as a good many others.

"At times I would have return of my rheumatism, but nothing like that I formerly had. Each attack was lighter. Each time I fought it with Athlophoros, and got the better of it. Now I have for a year enjoyed good health and freedom from pains. I took in all ten or twelve bottles of the medicine, and if I were again to be attacked by rheumatism would take more.

Bishop Bowman, on being asked "was the relief which Mr. Southard experienced more than you had expected?" replied: "Certainly it was, for I had not expected anything. I brought him the Athlophoros because I had seen that it had done so much good to Mr. Keely and others in Indianapolis. It seemed a last resort, for Mr. Southard's case was such a severe one that I had little or no hope of even giving him relief. But seeing the completeness of his cure I have recommended the medicine to others. I have not had occasion to use it myself, for I have not had rheumatism and am in excellent health. Of all those to whom I have recommended it I have heard of only one instance in which decided benefit was not gained. I consider Athlophoros a wonderful medicine."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall Street, New York.

A Fasting Girl.

In Cincinnatti a sixteen-year-old girl recently died after a fast of fifty-two days. She had been attacked by something like paralysis which rendered it impossible for her to take nourishment. The human system cannot thrive without good food and good ability to digest it. Weak and impaired digestion is rectified by Brown's Iron Bitters—better than any other tonic in the world. Mr. J. L. Freeberg, Pomeroy, Iowa, says: "I used Brown's Iron Bitters for dyspepsia and poor appetite; completely cured me." It will cure you.

A Bird that Turns Somersaults.

There's a pretty little bird that lives in hinc, and is called the Fork-Tailed Parus. It is about as big as a robin, and has a red beak, yellow legs, black tail, and red-and-yellow wings. Nearly all the colors are in his dress, you see, and he is a gay fellow. This bird has a trick known by no other birds that ever I heard of. He turns somersaults! Not only does he do this in free life on the trees, but also after he is caught and put into a cage. He throws his head far back, and over he goes, touching the bars of his cage, and alighting upon his feet on the floor or on a perch. He will do it over and over a number of times without stopping, as though he thought it great fun. All his family have the same trick, and they are called Tumblers. The people of China are fond of keeping them in cages and seeing them tumble.

Carelessness is the true cause of a great many of our misfortunes. It was carelessness according to the admission of Stephen W. Reynolds of Coldwater, Michigan, that brought on a severe attack of colic. "The pain was intensely acute," he writes. "I was cured in two hours by Mishler's Herb Bitters." This great household remedy never fails when used as directed for colic, cramp, pain in the stomach, dysentary, diarrhoea, indigestion, or kidney and liver disorders.

THE MODEST FATHER.—"Father," began a young Detroiter the other evening, "were you in the war?"

"Yes, my son."

"Was it awful?"

"Yes."

"Lots of dead and wounded men?"

"Yes."

"Did you kill many?"

"Well, I shouldn't like to answer that question."

"Are you very modest, pa?"

"I hope I am too modest to brag."

"That was what Mr. Smith meant, then, when he was telling the men down at the drug store that you hadn't any war record to brag of."

"He did, eh? Smith is a liar!"

"That's what I thought. He told the men that you run so fast he couldn't catch you on horseback, and any boy knows that a horse can catch a man with a stiff knee."

Medical Value of Wines.

As a general rule the use of wine is not necessary for young or adult persons in good health, breathing country air and not exposed to ovarwork. As however life advances and the circulation becomes languid, natural red wine used in moderation, becomes an essential article and in many cases absolutely necessary but it must be the pure product of the grape. And even in the Eastern States the physician meets large numbers of town people, especially women, who cannot dejest the food and drinks suited to out-door laboring people. In such cases they resort to the beverage of tea, which gives rise to a distressing dyspepsia. The Wines produced in New Jersey, especially the Burgundy and the Port Grape Wines from Alfred Speer's Vineyards at Passaic, N. J., are the more reliable and most sought after by those who travelled and know what wines are.

A Graphic and Thrilling Recital of That Deadly Shock of War

The following from an old army comrade of Capt. Chaney Dupont was [illegible] received a few days ago [illegible] graphic [illegible] description, a picture remarkable that it deserves a permanent place in the history of the great American Conflict.

OBITUARIES.

Another of Raisin's early residents has passed into eternity. Thus they go—one by one—the aged pioneers, leaving behind them the memory of upright and worthy lives.

Almira Cleveland entered into her rest April 2, 1885, in the eighty-third year of her age. She was born in Pennsylvania in the year 1802. From there she removed with her parents to Otsego, N. Y., where she married Justus Cleveland. In 1837 she came with her husband and four children to Michigan, where upon a farm of unimproved government land in the township of Raisin, three miles southeast of Tecumseh, they began their home. Three times death invaded this home, claiming for its victims the husband and father. This struck and bereft the mother of [illegible] overwhelmed and discouraged, but with characteristic courage and unshaken perseverance she [illegible] the slender and [illegible] fatherless children, managed to make a comfortable home and maintenance for herself and them upon your comparatively new farm, until her children were able to care for and take home for themselves and are now respected citizens in our midst. The latter years of her life Mrs. Cleveland chose to spend in the homes of her children where she was as honored as welcome. She possessed uniform firmness and decision of character combined with a self-reliance and lively cheerfulness which made her a [illegible] of her family and which she maintained through all her last illness never murmuring. During her last [illegible] Mrs. Cleveland united with the Presbyterian church of Tecumseh. Her advanced and varied circumstances of later years prevented her regular walk with that church, but she left the comforting assurance with those whose privilege it was to minister with her from time to time during the [illegible] that she had not been [illegible] from the privileges of the [illegible] High.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Mrs. D. H. Silvers went to Detroit Monday, to spend a few days with her niece, Mrs. J. R. Stirling.

W. D. VanTuyle returned from the East last Thursday night. E. R. Smith is expected home this week.

Georges and Ned Newcomb, of Blissfield, visited their sister, Mrs. John T. Clark, last week.

Mrs. Frank Muir, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Charles Johnston, in Detroit.

The Congregational social at the parsonage last week, was well attended. The receipts were over $7.

Charles Dell, of Battle Creek, arrived here last Saturday to attend the burial of his sister, Mrs. Imogene Chamberlain, who died last Friday at her home in Omaha, Nebraska. The remains were brought to Clinton, Monday and borne from the depot to the cemetery, where a short service was held. The beautiful flowers which accompanied the deceased gave evidence of the high esteem in which she was held, and the many kind friends she has left to regret her loss, in her western home. She leaves a husband, and child one year old.

Mrs. Dow Draper, of Mt. Pleasant, Mich. is visiting at her father's, Jacob Smith's.

Mrs. Charles Clark entertained several of her friends, at her home, last Tuesday afternoon. Miss Lou Reynolds did likewise, Wednesday.

Mrs. A. Matthews has been quite sick for a few days.

Charles W. Parker, George W. Freese, and Edwin Rose, of Detroit, spent Sunday in Clinton. Bad pennies will return.

A niece of Mrs. Hixon's, from Kansas City, visited her the first of the week.

School was dismissed last Thursday for an indefinite time, for the purpose of ascertaining by investigation whether the building was, as some feared, unsafe. A committee was appointed to make an examination, which was done immediately. The building was pronounced to be in such a condition as to endanger the lives of the pupils and teachers, and in accordance with the wishes of many, action was immediately taken to put the building in good shape, notwithstanding the objections of a few. It is as yet undecided when school duties will be resumed.

L. K. Davis moved his stock of jewelry into C. S. Burrough's drug store last Tuesday. He will occupy part of the east side.

At the last meeting of the scholars of long ago, held April 17th, at the house of J. B. Hause, the following committees were appointed.

Committee on Reception.—Mrs. A. B. VanDeMark, Mrs. Merritt Martin, Mrs. Stancliff, Mrs. Jas. Halladay, Mrs. James Hause.

Committee on Supper.—Mr. and Mrs. John Hause, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Halladay, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Belding, Mrs. J. W. Bradner, Miss Sophia Larzelere.

Committee on Decoration.—Mr. and Mrs. A. B. VanDeMark, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Merritt Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. VanDeMark, Mr. and Mrs. John Hause, Mrs. Mary Guiwits, Mrs. J. E. McCollum.

Committee on Finance.—A. B. VanDeMark, J. E. McCollum.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

John Iveson had a severe attack of congestive apoplexy last week while doing his chores at the barn. He is now improving and we shall expect to see him out ere long.

W. J. Holdridge has been sick for the past two weeks with inflamation of the kidneys but is better at present.

Mrs. Frank Frink, of Raisin Center, is very sick with blood poisoning. For the past few days but little hopes of her recovery has been entertained. We are glad however to state that her case appears more favorable at present.

Last Sunday Will Rector drove down to Al Macham's and brought his little boy with him. Soon after their arrival Al's dog concluded he would like a small boy for dinner and commenced an attack on the child without any cause or provocation, biting him severely on the arm in several places. Al gave him a good flogging thinking to learn him better, but the next day he went for Abbott Smith's boy and bit him on the shoulder. It is unnecessary to state that the dog did not live long after this.

Holloway is again connected with the outside world by telephone, Osgood & Dennison having lately put in a new instrument, and it is a daisy. Conversation can be carried on with parties in Detroit as easily and intelligibly as between parties in the same room.

Al Macham does not seem to fear rain at present as he has torn the roof all off from his house.

ONSTED ODDS.

Fred Glenn spent last Sabbath with friends in Tipton.

Wilson Lee is on a business trip in Clinton county.

Chas. D. Smith has taken the contract to build a house for Jerome Snow.

The late spring makes a good market for corn. Onsted and Wemple are selling a good deal at fifty cents per bushel.

Edmund Harris has rented his farm to Spencer Curtis.

Dr. Spaulding and wife, of Lyons, Mich., are visiting their son, Mr. E. Spaulding, of this place.

The attendance was not very large at the necktie festival Friday evening, but the society cleared over $7.

Mr. Chas. Culbertson Jr., lost a cow valued at $40, last Friday with heart disease. The heart was as large as a four quart pail.

Misses Ella Jackson and Ida Arner visited friends at Dundee last week.

You can learn all about Gratiot Co. and the "Gallery," of Mr. G. W. Jackson. He has some specimens of corn that he brought home with him.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Since my last letter Vernon French has been ferried over the dusky river and no man can be more missed by all classes of society here. He was a prominent member of the Baptist church, and fearless of criticism whenever his sympathy was aroused; no matter if the whole world's verdict was arrayed in opposition. Tis a pardonable sin to err on the side of mercy, describes his manner of living, and his creed was but generous conformity to his practice. As he was one of the first settlers here, his acquaintance was large, and house fashioned for hospitality. It has been the one gathering place where denominational sentiment was no bother, and the night never stormy enough to keep the boys and girls from improvising socials and rackets, his own large family kept parental ears attuned to. Both he and the wife who survives, have never made years, or difference of opinion an excuse to bar them from friendly intercourse with all; and many old friends who had shared pioneer vicissitudes were too much unnerved to attend the quiet church funeral at which he had directed nothing should be said of himself whatever. Rev. W. Palmer preached from the text, "What shall I do to be saved?" and a coffin covered with flowers impressed a silent lesson on hearts of those who heard, and whom dread of seeing an old friend's narrow house, kept at home. Yet he left all cheerfully.

When Arbor days are appointed failures, why don't Governors make ministers preach against petty falsehood and plant truth. Among wage workers there is another kind of trouble. They had choice between starving, or getting into debt, and the late spring sprouts nothing but impatience, which, for bridging difficulty, is worse than nothing.

The Baptist church of Brooklyn burned about two o'clock Monday morning. Only the organ, a few chairs and pulpit were saved. The heavy timbers (which were drawn and helped into form of a religious land mark, by the late Vernon French) fell outward without damaging near buildings, and as there was no breeze, it was but coals and ashes in less than an hour. It was noted for the beautiful tone of its great bell, now shivered, for having once been the most powerful church of its kind in Michigan, and for having sent from its Sabbath school ranks, some of the most famous preachers in the United States, Missionaries to China and other heathen lands.

BAKING POWDERS.

Interesting Tests Made by the Government Chemists.

Dr. Edward G. Love, the Analytical Chemist for the Government has made some interesting experiments as to the comparative value of baking powders. Dr. Love's test was made to determine what brands are the most economical to use, and as their capacity lies in their leavening power, tests were directed solely to ascertain the available gas of each powder. Dr. Love's report gives the following:

Name of the Baking Powders.	Strength Cubic inches Gas per each oz. of Powder.
"Royal" (cream tartar powder)	127.4
"Patapsco" (alum powder)	125.2*
"Rumford's" (phosphate, fresh)	122.5*
"Rumford's" (phosphate, old)	32.7*
"Hanford's None Such," fresh	121.6
"Hanford's None Such," old	84.5
"Redhead's,"	117.0
"Charm," (alum powder)	116.9*
"Amazon," (alum powder)	111.9*
"Clevelands," (contains lime)	110.8
"Sea Foam,"	107.9
"Czar,"	106.8
"Dr. Price's," (contains lime)	102.6
"Snow Flake," (Groff's St. Paul)	101.88
"Lewis'" Condensed	98.2
"Congress," yeast	97.5
"C. E. Andrews & Co's" (contains alum)	78.17*
"Heckers,"	92.5
"Gillets,"	84.2
"Bulk,"	80.5

*In his report, the Government chemist says:

"I regard all alum powders as very unwholesome. Phosphate and Tartaric powders liberate their gas too freely in process of baking, or under varying climatic changes suffer deteriration."

Dr. H. A. Mott, the former Government chemist, after a careful and elaborate examination of the various Baking Powders of commerce, reported to the Government in favor of the Royal brand.

Prof. McMurtrie, late chief chemist for the U. S. Government at Washington, says: The chemical tests to which I have submitted the Royal Baking Powder, prove it perfectly healthful, and free from every deleterious substance."

THE G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

The executive committee and officers of the G. A. R. association, met in Adrian last Monday, at the office of B. F. Graves, who is the vice president of the organization. There were present President O. A. Janes, of Hillsdale; secretary Gus. F. Smith, of Jonesville; treasurer C. E. Rogers, of Adrian, and the following members of the executive committee: H. M. Parker, Blissfield; S. P. Hosmer, Tecumseh; Wm. Keough, Hillsdale; Wm. W. Wade, Jonesville; F. H. Cobb and B. W. Roys, of Hudson, and E. J. Babcock, Adrian.

It was decided to hold the encampment on the 26th, 27th and 28th of August next, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, at a place yet to be chosen.

The meeting adjourned subject to the call of the president. In the meantime the secretary was instructed to correspond with locations in the district for the purpose of obtaining bids for holding the encampment.

The G. A. R. posts of Branch, Washtenaw and Monroe counties were invited to participate with Hillsdale and Lenawee in their encampment. It is understood that Jonesville has already made a bid of $500 to secure the encampment there.—Adrian Times.

Adrian Times: Mr. Gordon H. Knott has just completed a series of very important experiments in this city, under the auspices of the L. S. & M. S. railroad company. His experiments have been conducted at the Lake Shore tanks, and consisted in arranging a filter to take from water used in locomotive boilers the large proportion of diluted lime, which, unless removed, encrusts the interior of the boilers, entailing much expensive care and cleaning. Strangely enough, the largest ingredient in Mr. Knott's filter is lime, and the severe trial to which his process has been subject, has fully demonstrated its entire efficacy. It will be adopted by the Lake Shore, and placed in all the tanks of the road. Mr. Knott's fortune has undoubtedly been made by his success in inventing the filter.

The Agents' Herald, published in Philadelphia, is the most untiring enemy of humbugs and frauds published in the United States. The editor, L. Lum Smith, has been the defendant in several libel suits, and always victorious. He never flinches in his efforts to expose dishonesty, and the honest people of the nation ought to give him a warm, sympathetic support.

RIDGEWAY TO ITHACA

On the morning of April 9th, in company with Wash Jackson, and grip in hand, we bid our friends good bye for a few days. We took a tie pass over the M. & O. R. R. to Tecumseh and took the noon train for Jackson on the branch. After waiting a few hours we took the 4:19 P. M. train on the Saginaw Valley road to Leslie, and spent the night with cousin John and Alice Winchell. He is engaged in the meat business and has a good trade. From there we went to James Freer's, west of Mason, where we were kindly welcomed and entertained. It is the decision of the farmer's club at Mason that Mr. Freer and Mrs. Jewett have the finest farms in that section. We spent a few hours at Mr. and Mrs. Frank Freer's. They have a fine boy to cheer their weary hours in their new home. Our friend Rufus Raymond and family are enjoying their new home and have a fine farm. Friday morning Ed. took us to Mason, and we took the 8:30 A. M. train for Owosso where we changed cars and went to Ithaca on the T. A. & Northern Mich. R. R., arriving at noon. We walked out to Mr. Courtland Snedicor's and found them well and enjoying their home among the stumps. He has the best piece of wheat we saw during our journey. Ithaca is the county seat of Gratiot Co. and has a population of 1500, and still growing. The city can boast of as fine brick blocks as Tecumseh, and as good a jail as our county, and have a school building as good as the best, it cost $23,000. They have five churches, two grist mills and one grain elevator, a hoop factory, machine shop, and saw mill, and one of the largest stave factories in the state, and as good a livery as any city, and other business places as good as any of our Southern county cities. The country around Ithaca will be the best farming country in Michigan, at no distant day. The land is suitable to raise any and everything. Ithaca has two railroads, the T. A. & Northern Mich., and the S. V. & St. Louis branch. There are quite a number of Lenawee county people about Ithaca and all like it, and are doing well for a new country. Land is worth from $30 to $100 per acre. On Monday in company with cousin Arthur Snedicor, we went to St. Louis to see friends and visit our cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Albert VanRiper, who live three miles northwest of St. Louis on a farm of forty acres. The land is good, with here and there a pine. St. Louis with its noted mineral water cures, and salt wells has become a city of about 5,000 inhabitants. On Wednesday morning April 15th we bid farewell to our friends and took the 7:30 A. M. train for Owosso, leaving the ground covered with four inches of snow. The country from Ithaca to Owosso is very level and will make as fine a farming country as we have in our state, in a short time. At Owosso we took the 10:35 A. M. train and went to Lansing, and spent a few hours at our beautiful capitol, which is as fine a building as any state in the Union. We went up to the dome and viewed the city, and was well paid for our trouble. We went through the museum, then visited the Senate chamber, and saw Senator Chas. Henry. Then went to the Representative Hall, and saw Rep. Howell from our district. As both houses were in session we enjoyed our time at the capitol very much. After our visit we took the train on the D. L. & Northern R. R. for Fowlerville and spent the evening with Rev. Jessie Kilpatrick and family; leaving on the 8:28 A. M. train Thursday, for Jackson. Arriving at 12 M. and took dinner with our friend, Mrs. Wm. Howes. During the afternoon we visited the Smith Purifying manufactory, on North Jackson St. He employs upwards of 400 hands and is doing an immense business, and has one of the finest grist mills nearly ready to run that there is in the state. We then went through the prison where over 600 men are working for their board and lodging; as we were going from one department to another we could not decide which department would be preferable, but felt more at ease outside the gate. After our visit to the prison, we spent a few hours at Rob Mills' and Mrs. Wm. Howes' Union Music Rooms, 117 South Jackson St.; they keep a general assortment of the latest sheet music and all kinds of musical instruments, from a jewsharp to a piano or a full set of band instruments, and teach music on the piano, cornet and violin, both vocal and instrumental. In the evening in company with Mrs. Howes and her friend we attended the opera to see Pinafore played, it was played by home talent and was rendered with much credit to those taking part, the attendance was very large and the best of order kept. After the entertainment we stopped with Mr. Christopher VanHorn for the night, an old acquaintance of Wash. Friday morning we took the 6:20 train for home, arriving at 10 A.M. finding all lovely. In the evening we attended the necktie festival at the church given by the ladies, which finished our pleasure trip very nicely.

THERMOPYLÆ.

Like the blades of the grass like the drops of the rain
Like the leaves that swarm on the Arcadian plain
[illegible]
The Persians came down in the pride of the spring
[illegible]
Xerxes [illegible]
Ay, and with [illegible] flowing locks
Lay stifled and grim in the shade of the rocks.
With the earth for their pillow the sky for their sheet
But their conquests began when their hearts ceased to beat.

The eyes of the Mother are dried.
And the Spartan mother's heart has forgotten its pride.
The Kings and the Kingdoms have sought their dark rest
And the eagles hovered over the drowsy-lying breast.
But those dead hearts live and they camp and they fight
Wherever the lightnings are in the night
The mountains may crumble the oceans may dry.
But the good of a deed that is great can not die.

THE SIEGE OF BERLIN.

A Faithful Granddaughter's Imaginary Campaign.

We were passing up the avenue of the Champs Elysees with Dr. V., traying in the walls riddled by shells and the pavements torn by grapeshot the story of Paris besieged. As we neared the Pond Point de l'Etoile the doctor paused, and pointing to one of those great corner houses so showily grouped around the Arc de Triomphe—

"Do you see," he said to me, "those four closed windows above that balcony? During the first days of the month of August—that terrible August of the year 1870, so laden with storm and disaster, I was called there for a case of apoplectic stroke. It was the residence of Colonel Jouve, a cuirassier of the First Empire, an old man, his head turned with glory and patriotism, who at the beginning of the war had come to lodge in the Champs Elysees, in an apartment with a balcony. Can you imagine why? In order to be present at the triumphal return of our troops. Poor old man! The news of Wissembourg came to him as he was rising from the table. As he read the name of Napoleon at the foot of the bulletin of defeat he fell stricken.

"I found the old cuirassier stretched his full length upon the carpet of the room, his face flushed and dull, as if from the blow of a club upon the head. Erect, he must have been very tall; prostrate, he appeared immense. With fine feature, superb teeth, a fleece of white curls, eighty years which seemed sixty. Near him knelt his granddaughter, all in tears. She resembled him. Side by side they seemed two beautiful Greek medallions struck from the same die. The one, antique, earth-stained, with the contour a little worn; the other, resplendent and clear, with all the brilliancy and luster of the new impression.

"The grief of this child touched me. A soldier's daughter and grandaughter of a soldier, her father was on the staff of MacMahon, and the image of this old man stretched before her worked in her mind another image not less terrible. I reassured her as best I could, but at heart I held little hope. We had a case of out-and-out paralysis of one side, and at eighty years that is not readily recovered from.

"During three days, in fact, the old man remained in the same state of motionless stupor. It was at this moment that the news of Reischoffen arrived at Paris. You recollect in what a strange fashion. Until evening we all believed in a great victory—twenty thousand Prussians killed, the Prince Royal a prisoner.

"I do not know by what miracle, what magnetic current, an echo of this national joy reached our poor deaf-mute in the grasp of his paralysis, but that evening, on approaching his bed, I found no longer the same man. The eye was nearly clear, the tongue less heavy. He had strength to smile at me, and stammered twice:

"'Vic-to-ry?'

"'Yes, Colonel, a great victory!'

"And as I gave him the details of the splendid success of MacMahon I saw his features relax, his face cleared.

"When I went out the young girl was awaiting me, pale and erect, before the door. She was sobbing.

"'But he is saved, I said to her, taking her hands.

"The unhappy child had hardly the courage to answer me. The true news of Reischoffen had just been posted—MacMahon in flight; the whole army crushed. Our eyes met in consternation. She was desolate thinking of her father. I was trembling thinking of the old man. Surely he would not resist this fresh shock. But what was to be done. Leave him his joy, the illusions which had brought him back to life? But then it would be necessary to deceive him.

"'Very well, I shall deceive him' said the heroic girl quickly, wiping away her tears, and as we went she went back into her grandfather's room.

"It was a hard task which she had taken upon herself. For a few days all went well. The old man's head was feeble, and he let himself be misled like a child; but with returning health his ideas became clearer. It was necessary to keep him informed of the movement of the armies, to prepare military bulletins for him. It was touching to see this beautiful girl sat night and day over her map of Germany, pricking out little flags, forcing themselves to follow a whole right of our campaign. Bazaine retired upon Berlin, Frossard in Bavaria, MacMahon upon the Baltic. For all this she asked my advice and I aided her as much as I could, but it was the grandfather after all who helped us most in this imaginary invasion. He had conquered Germany so many times under the First Empire! He knew in advance all the moves. Now, there's where they're going. That's what they'll do," and his predictions were always realized, which gave him no little pride.

"Unfortunately, it was in vain that we took cities, gained battles—we never went fast enough for him. That old man was insatiable. Each day when I arrived I learned of a new feat of arms.

"'Doctor, we have taken Mayence,' the young girl would say, approaching me with a heart-broken smile, and I heard through the door a joyous voice which cried out to me, 'We're getting on! We're getting on! In eight days we shall enter Berlin!' At that moment the Prussians were not more than eight days from Paris. We questioned at first whether it would not be better to remove him to the country; but once out of doors the state of France would have revealed all to him, and I deemed him still too feeble, too bewildered by his great shock, to permit him to know the truth. It was decided to remain.

"The first day of the investment of the city I went up to their apartment. I trembling, very much moved with anguish of heart which was brought to me as by the closed gates of Paris; the rattle under the walls, our suburbs became frontiers. I found the good man jubilant and proud.

"'Eh, then!' he said to me, 'the siege has commenced, then.'

"I looked at him stupefied.

"'What, Colonel, you know?'

"His granddaughter turned toward me.

"'Ah! Yes, doctor, it is the great news. The siege of Berlin has commenced.'

"She said that plying her needle with such a tranquil little air. 'How could he suspect anything? He could not hear the cannon of the forts. This unfortunate Paris desolate and upturned he could not see it.' What he did see from his bed was a panel of the Arc de Triomphe, and in his room, about him, a complete bric-a-brac of the First Empire well calculated to maintain his illusions. Portraits of Marshals, engravings of battles, the King of Rome in baby dress, town, the great silk-wide tables ornamented with copper trophies, loaded with imperial relics, with medallions, bronzes, a fragment of the rock of St. Helena under glass, various miniatures of the same lady, all becoming in ball costume, with a yellow robe, mutton-leg sleeves and clear eyes—and all this—the side tables, the King of Rome, the yellow ladies with the high shoulders and short waists, or that awkward stiffness which was the grace of 1806—it was this atmosphere of victories and conquests, even more than all that we could say to him, that made the Colonel believe so naively in the siege of Berlin.

"From this time we found our military operations much simplified. Taking Berlin was now only a matter of patience. From time to time when the old man worried too much a letter from his son would be read to him—an imaginary letter, of course, as nothing now entered Paris, and as since Sedan, the aid-de-camp of MacMahon had been sent to a fortress in Germany. You can imagine the despair of that poor child, without news of her father, knowing him to be a prisoner, deprived of everything, sick perhaps, and herself obliged to make him speak in joyous letters, a little short, as a soldier on the field would write, always advancing into the conquered country. Sometimes strength failed her; weeks would pass without news. But the old man grew restless and no longer slept. Then there quickly arrived a letter from Germany, which she came and read to him gayly by his bedside, repressing her tears. The Colonel listened religiously, smiling significantly approved, criticised, explained to us the confused passages. But finest of all were the answers he sent to his son. 'Never forget that you are French,' he would say to him. 'Be generous with these poor people. Do not make the invasion too burdensome.' And there were interminable recommendations, admirable preaching on respect for the properties, the politeness due to ladies—a regular code of military honor for the use of conquerers. There were also general considerations on politics, the conditions of peace to be imposed on the vanquished. On this point I am bound to say he was not exacting.

"'Repayment of the cost of the war and nothing more. What good in taking their provinces? Can you make France out of Germany?'

"He dictated this in a firm voice, and there was such candor in his words, such a beautiful, patriotic faith, that it was impossible to listen unmoved.

"Meanwhile the siege was constantly advancing. Not that of Berlin, alas! It was the time of the great cold, of the bombardment, of the epidemic, of the famine. But, thanks to our care and effort, to the indefatigable tenderness that surrounded him—the serenity of the old man was not for an instant disturbed. Up to the last I was able to get white bread for him and fresh meat. It was only for him, indeed, and you can not imagine anything more touching than those innocently selfish breakfasts of the grandfather—the old man on his bed fresh and smiling, the napkin tucked under his chin near him his granddaughter, a little pale from privations, guiding his hands, giving him drink, helping him to eat all these forbidden good things. Then, animated by the meal, in the comfort of his warm room, the winter wind without, the snow beating against his windows, the old man recalled his campaigns in the North, and recounted to us for the hundredth time that terrible retreat from Russia, when there was nothing that frozen biscuit and horseflesh to eat.

"'Do you understand that, Little Olympe, we ate horseflesh.'

"Did she understand, Sir? For two months she had eaten nothing else.

"From day to day the weary, in proportion as our invalid's strength grew less with the sick man grew more intensely. That thrilling of all his senses which had served him well until then commenced to disappear. Two or three times already the terrible roadsides of the Port Maillot had made him start with ears erect like a hunting dog. We had to invent a lasting victory of Bazaine under the walls of Berlin, and salutes fired in honor of it on the Hospital of the Invalides. Another day which his bed had been pushed near the window—it was, I think, the Thursday of Buzenval—he saw plainly the National Guards who formed in the Avenue of the Grande Armee.

"'What troops are those?' demanded the old man, and we heard him grumbling between his teeth—

"'Bad drill! bad drill!'

"He said nothing more about it, but we saw that thenceforth we would have to take great precautions. Unfortunately, there were not enough taken.

"One evening as I came in the girl came to me very much troubled.

"'To-morrow they enter,' she said to me.

"Was the door of the grandfather's room open? The fact is that on thinking of it since I recall that he had that evening an extraordinary expression. It is probable that he had heard us. Only we spoke of the Prussians, and he, good man, was thinking of the French, for whose triumphal entry he had waited so long. MacMahon coming down the avenue amid flowers, the flourish of trumpets, his son by the side of the Marshal, and he, the old man, on his balcony in full dress uniform as at Lutzen, saluting the torn flags and the eagles black with powder.

"Poor Father Jouve! He doubtless imagined that we wished to prevent his witnessing the parade of our troops in order to guard him from too great emotion, so he carefully refrained from speaking of it to any one; but on the morrow, at the very hour that the Prussian battalions advanced cautiously on the long road which led from the Port of Maillot to the Tuileries, an upper window was gently raised, and the Colonel appeared on the balcony with his helmet, his great sabre, his glorious old uniform of the ancient cuirassier of Milhaud complete. I still wonder what effort of will, what rebound of life thus put him on his feet and into uniform. What is certain is that he was there, erect behind the railing, astonished at finding the avenues so wide—so still—the blinds of the houses closed. Paris desolate as a pest house, flags everywhere; but, so singular, all white with red crosses, and no one to meet our soldiers.

"For a moment he could believe himself mistaken. But no! down there behind the Arc de Triomphe there was a confused noise, a black line which advanced in the rising light. Then, little by little the spikes of the helmets flashed, the little drums of Jena began to beat, and under the Arc de l'Etoile, its rhythm marked by the heavy tramp of the sections and the clash of sabres, burst forth the triumphal march of Schubert.

"Then, in the gloomy silence of the place there was heard a cry—a terrible cry—'To arms! To arms! The Prussians!' And the four Uhlans of the advance guard could see up there on the balcony a tall old man stagger and, waving his arms, fall rigid.

Morphine Parties.

I hear of morphine parties of the small-and-early kind in the higher couches sociales. Those invited to such little gatherings are known to the hostess as being in the habit of resisting ills to which flesh is heir, by subcutaneous injections of the narcotic above named. The injection is performed with a little instrument, the manufacture of which is passing from the surgical-instrument maker to the jeweler, and is becoming an objet d'art. Guests and the lady of the house sit in a circle, and listen to a concert in a distant room. They describe their sensations to each other. Novices derive peculiar beauty from the morphinizing process. One sees in many of the portraits at the Mirliton the traces of morphine in the morbidezza of the faces and the brownish circles that surround eyes which are at once brilliant and softly languishing. It may be remembered that the late Duchesse de Chaulnes killed herself with subcutaneous injections of morphine. She resorted to them to soothe irritated nerves and vary her undoubted beauty, and had to continue them because it became impossible for her to leave them off. I know of a morphio-maniac who would not for the world eat two kinds of meat on the same day in Lent or indulge in the pleasure of a waltz. The Archbishop of Paris will, I take it, soon issue a pastoral against the fashionable narcotic.—Paris Cor. London Truth.

LATE FASHIONS.

Fashionable Fabrics and Methods of Wearing Them.

Tricotrine is a fashionable dress fabric very popular abroad.

It is now the fashion to braid the Langtry knot of hair worn low in the nape of the neck.

A new violet blue, shading to purple, is a new shade called Yeux Dagmar, after the deep peculiar color of the eyes of the Empress of Austria, formerly Princess Dagmar.

The short Russian and the rounding zouave jackets, of the style worn by the Greek raliares, are two natty and picturesque overgarments which are to be in high vogue the coming season both for home wear and for full-dress occasions. For the latter use the material is of the richest velvet plush, or satin, richly adorned with applique bands, lace or embroidery; and for the former the jackets are made of fine French cashmere, tricot or basket cloth, or plain vigogne, simply trimmed with rows of braid or narrow velvet ribbon.

A very stylish evening dress made for a young debutante of this year shows a skirt of cream-colored India cashmere, surrounded by three deep flounces of the goods shirred on at the top. Each flounce is tucked in rows of three with a deep hem below, and edging the hem is an exceedingly pretty design in cream-colored Irish point lace four inches wide. The short cutaway jacket is edged to match, and opens over a pleated blouse vest of pale blue surah. Ribbons of the same delicate shade hold the loopings of the full cashmere tunic at each side.

Removable trains are sent home with most evening toilets. They are very useful, and if well-cut and arranged, should never betray their adjustable nature. Velvet trains are much in vogue, and, as colored bodices are worn above the skirts, black or white, the addition of a train matching the bodice effects an agreeable transformation when required.

Gold and silver laces, used with discretion, are in high favor for ball toilets. The purple shades, becoming so fashionable, harmonize beautifully with the pale gold trimmings, and silver lace, in its filmy exquisite devices, tones perfectly with the pale blues, mauves and pinks that are now so generally worn.

Foreign manufacturers and modistes have made special note of the fact that Queen Victoria has ordered a number of pieces of Irish poplin to be included in the materials for Princess Beatrice's trousseau, and it is supposed by this that royal patronage will give a stimulus to the sale of this fabric. The newest makes are very attractive, both in their beautiful shades of color and also in their qualities, the surfaces being most soft and glossy to the touch. Formerly, in spite of their excellent wearing qualities, Irish poplins did not look worth the high price asked for them. Now, beauty of appearance is associated with durability, and no better combination can be wished for. White poplin is a handsome and economical fabric for an evening dress, as it will bear much making over, and also takes a splendid dye. The Queen, it is said has ordered a pale silver-blue poplin, one of pearl white flowered with forget-me-nots, and a heavy, lustrous one of pure white.

A pretty little house apron suitable for ordinary home wear is made of one width of goods in a rounding shape, sloping a little at the top and gathered in a belt. The apron and the small round pocket are edged with fine linen lace, four inches wide, and a handsome belt ribbon with bows and ends is tied at the left side. The novel part of the apron consists of a Fedora bib, which is shirred at the throat, brought down narrowly to the belt, and shirred again.

A great deal of velvet and velvet ribbon will be used for trimming even the lightest fabrics both as to texture and color. Silk gauze, broche with velvet figures, embroidered net, dotted silks, merveilleuxs, foulards, both plain and figured, will also be much employed. Very elegant yet not expensive toilets are formed of a silk skirt which has done duty before, veiled by a very deep flounce of ecru lace. The bodice may be either of new silk, lace-trimmed, or of the same silk, cut low and veiled with a high bodice of ecru net.

A very stylish Parisian bonnet lately exhibited had a medium-sized brim of darkest red velvet with a crown covered with Angora lace wrought with pale gold threads. The strings were of velvet, and the trimming upon the bonnet consisted of a cluster of deep red and yellow tulips in shaded velvet on one side, and a graceful fall of the gold-ran lace on the other, the airy waves caught here and there on the left of the crown with small jeweled ornaments of real gold.

Large clasps for handsome wraps of velvet, satin or plush, of the new Japanese brown, are made of real bronze with antique and mythological heads, in raised enamel. A head of Bacchus is one new design, this surrounded by a solid wreath of vine leaves of silver, with tiny clusters of grapes made of rubies. Some of these devices are exceedingly expensive, clasps for sash buckles, tall mantles, and the like, being made of real gold, or silver in lace work patterns, and handsomely carved slides in gold or silver set with diamonds, pearls and other precious stones.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Firm mother to boy—Didn't I tell you that I'd whip you if you played in that water again, say? Boy—Yessum. Firm mother—Then why did you do it? Boy—Because I didn't believe you. Firm mother—Never mind. You shan't go down town with me when I go, see if you do. Shortly afterward the firm mother and the boy go down town together.—Arkansaw Traveler.

The Care of Children.

BOSTON, MASS.—A leading medical journal thinks it is about time mothers should know how seaiously the health of children is imperilled by the use of preparations containing morphia and oplum, and given for the cure of colds and coughs. The chemist of the Brooklyn Board of Health, Otto Grothe, Ph.D., a graduate of the University of Kiel, Germany, certifies officially that recently a harmless and yet effective article for such complaints has come to his notice. He refers to the newly discovered Red Star Cough Cure, which he found purely vegetable.

That Tired Feeling

When the weather grows warmer, that extreme tired feeling, want of appetite, dullness, languor, and lassitude, afflict almost the entire human family, and scrofula and other diseases caused by humors, manifest themselves with many. It is impossible to throw off this debility and expel humors from the blood without the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I could not sleep, and would get up in the morning with hardly life enough to get out of bed. I had no appetite, and my face would break out with pimples. I bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling, and my appetite improved." R. A. SANFORD, Kent, O.

"I had been much troubled by general debility. Last spring Hood's Sarsaparilla proved just the thing needed. I derived an immense amount of benefit. I never felt better." H. F. MILLET, Boston, Mass.

At no other season is the system so susceptible to the beneficial effects of a reliable tonic and invigorant. The impure state of the blood, the deranged digestion, and the weak condition of the body, caused by its long battle with the cold, wintry blasts, all call for the reviving, regulating and restoring influences so happily and effectively combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla did me a great deal of good. I had no particular disease, but was tired out from overwork, and it toned me up." MRS. G. E. SIMMONS, Cohoes, N. Y.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.

ATKINS SOAP COMPANY.

TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

We appeal to the intelligence and good management required to save your strength and take this method to place in your hands an agent, which, with absolute safety to the fabric, will wash clothes with less work than any other in the world.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES WOMEN.
ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

THE MONROE PRESBYTERY.

The Proceedings of the first day of the sessions were given last week. We herewith present a brief synopsis of the business transacted on Thursday, the last day of the meetings.

From the reports presented on Wednesday, we gather the following missionary statistics, which will be of general interest.

Rev. S. W. Pratt, chairman of the committee on foreign missions, reported $655 contributed for this cause from the churches themselves, and $[illegible] from the women's societies. This is an increase from the churches, and a slight decrease from the ladies' societies, over the previous year. From the report of Elder W. H. Boyd, of Monroe, on systematic beneficence, the following contributions to the various causes are taken: Home missions, $1,482; foreign missions, $1,082; education, $126; ministerial relief, $120; freedmen, $4.9.

The Ladies meetings were closed on Wednesday night.

The Presbytery met on Thursday morning at 8:30. Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. J. H. Phelps, of Reading. The election of Commissioners to the General Assembly at Cincinnati, resulted in the choice of Rev. Wm. H. Babbitt, of Tecumseh and Elder Wm. H. Boyd, of Monroe, as primaries, and Rev. Jas. H. Barkley, of Hillsdale, and Elder H. Peters, M. D., of Bissfield, as alternates. The overture of the church at Erie requesting Presbytery to sanction and advise a meeting of the church for the purpose of adopting term eldership was answered in the affirmative.

Petersburg was selected as the place for the fall meeting of Presbytery.

The various overtures sent down from General Assembly were duly answered. Revs. W. S. Taylor, S. W. Pratt and Elder W. H. Boyd were appointed a committee to revise the standing rules of Presbytery.

The afternoon session was taken up with the trial of the appeal of Mrs. Mary Hammond Johnson, from the decision of the session of the Monroe church. The appeal was not sustained and the decision of the church by its session was affirmed.

At the evening session the Pastoral relation between Rev. Jas. H. Barkley and the church at Hillsdale was dissolved that Mr. Barkley might assume the position of State Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., to which he had been chosen. An interesting report on Sunday schools was presented by Rev. H. P. Collin, of Coldwater. A review of the past 50 years of the churches, containing much interesting history was read by Wm. H. Boyd, and will be printed. A very cordial and complimentary resolution of thanks for the agreeable entertainment furnished by the people of Tecumseh was presented by Rev. H. Lamont and unanimously adopted, after which the Presbytery adjourned.

Coldwater Sun: Some people make a great mistake in stopping their county newspaper as a means of "economy." As quick as times become a little hard they begin to cast about for expenses to cut off, and soon light upon that extravagance, the newspaper, which costs them a dollar a year. Yet these same men will spend from twenty-five cents to a dollar a week—perhaps $25 a year—for tobacco or something stronger, and think nothing of it. Further, the live newspaper is worth to its readers many times the subscription price in practical use; the person who watches the advertisements and market reports is always able to buy and sell to the best advantage. Economy is wise but do not economize unwisely by discontinuing a first class paper.

The country editor is a man who reads newspapers, writes on most any subject, sticks type, folds papers, makes up the mail, runs on errands, saws wood, wipes on stiff towels, is ever inkbespattered, is blamed for a thousand things he never thought of, works hard all day, helps people into office who forgot all about it afterwards, and frequently gets cheated out of half he earns. He puffs and does more to build up a town than any one else, and the miser and old fogy are benefited, yet they will not take his paper, but will borrow it, read it and cuss the editor.—Exchange.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

The Rich and the Poor.

Poor Democrats inherit the kingdom of heaven; the rich are sent abroad as Ministers and Consuls.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The President's Backbone.

Mr. Cleveland has now been President a month, and this backbone seems, if anything, to be stiffening.—Mobile Register.

A Hint to Major Morse.

Lyons Times: Bridgeport Morse on fractions should make the Detroit Evening News the court journal, which it makes low obeisance on the bench.

High Hopes at the Hub.

Boston Traveller: This weather will bring the gum by delicious new maple sugar into the market, and we shall be able to get the rich syrup for our buckwheat cakes.

The Change of Administration.

Winter never dared to linger in the lap of spring in this shameless persistent and public manner under a Republican administration.—Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

A Point Well Put.

Buffalo Evening News: It will be well for so-called Democrats, who did not vote for Mr. Cleveland, and who are inclined to make the most noise over the Pearson case, to bear in mind that if it had not been for the mugwumps there would be no Democrats receiving office to-day.

A Step in the Right Direction.

Secretary Whitney's order requiring all clerks in the Navy Department to remain at work until five o'clock is another step in the right direction. For many years it has been the policy of officials to ask for and get as many clerks as possible. The result is they have secured so many that they have not known what to do with them, and the hours of work have, of necessity, been reduced until the clerks begin work about nine o'clock, dawdle about and waste their time, only to leave the department buildings at three or four o'clock in the afternoon.—Philadelphia Times.

A Caution to Black.

Brooklyn Eagle: Miss Ada C. Sweet, the Chicago pension agent, is described as tall, lithe, and supple as a panther. When she becomes excited she has a nervous way of working her fingers and her gray eyes "betray a wealth of meaning." Her hair is a reddish brown, not the reddish brown that Titian loved, but of a tint more closely allied to the colors of the sunset—that nameless shade which is usually associated with high spirit and indomitable resolution. It is understood that Commissioner Black will not solicit the privilege of a personal interview with Miss Sweet.

The Administration Paying its Debts.

St. Louis Republican: The present Administration shows its Democracy and its honesty by a willingness to pay its debts. Our most worthy and most excellent mugwumpian friends in New York have been paid in the reappointment of Mr. Pearson. Every Democrat should feel that a load is taken from his heart when that deed was done—a great stone, as it were, rolled away from the sepulchre. Now, when St. John is paid, and Brother Beecher and Brother Burchard and Brother Conklin, not forgetting Brother Edmunds, Mr. Arthur and Col. Frank Hatton, we believe the woods will be cleaned for a clear-cut Democratic Administration.

Miss Cleveland's Politics.

Chicago Herald: Miss Cleveland announces that the report to the effect that she is a Republican is untrue. She has never carried a torch and has never voted in her life, and as a matter of fact has paid very little attention to politics. Her forte is piety, but she is an ardent admirer of President Cleveland and will support his administration as long as it supports her. Further than this, she says she likes lively Republican women just as well as Democratic women, and can make herself at home with either so long as they don't blackguard Grover. The Herald believes that Miss Cleveland has made herself understood. There is no great prejudice anywhere against a Republican woman. It is the Republican man who votes and yells who makes the Democratic thunder rise.

A Question of Manhood.

Chicago Herald: The moral terrorism which has been exerted over the Prohibitionists since last fall is probably responsible for the disappearance of the party. Its members cannot stand criticism, lampooning, and bulldyragging, and they have had enough of these things to satisfy them for all time. Without indorsing the peculiar ideas of the party the Herald, as a matter of principle, regrets the dissolution of the Prohibitionists, for it believes it to have been the result of a species of intimidation and bulldozing having no parallel in this country outside of East Feliciana and Yazoo. If the temperance politicians have been converted to other faiths by persuasion no one need complain, but if they have been driven by abuse, social ostracism and business discrimination to conceal their real sentiments then the question becomes one of manhood, freedom and citizens' rights which ought not to be overlooked.

GEN. ALEXANDER KOMAROFF.

The long threatened Russo-Afghan war has begun and to Gen. A. Komaroff, the Russian Governor General of the Trans-Caspian Provinces is the striking of the first blow to be assigned. Following closely upon the statements of desire for peace on the part of Russia came the news of the fall of Penjdeh and the whole English world is aroused to the urgency of immediate action. General Komaroff in his official statement reports that in consequence of provocative and manifestly hostile proceedings of the Afghans he was compelled to attack them on the 30th of March on both sides of the Kushk river. The result was the defeat of the Afghans with the loss of 500 men, all their artillery, two standards, and their entire camp and provisions. Gen. Komaroff also reports that some British officers, who had been eye witnesses but not participants in the engagement, appealed to the Russians for protection, but unfortunately a convoy which he immediately dispatched to the relief of these officers was unabled to overtake the Afghan cavalry who carried the British away in their flight. Penjdeh, around which the reported fighting took place is not a town in the strictest sense of the word but is merely a valley over which a number of mud cabins are scattered. It is about seventy miles from the nearest Russia camp. It is south of Aktepeh, the Russian stronghold. The two were once large towns but by the westward march of civilization they fell to decay and ruin.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

For May deals largely with original and timely articles. It opens with an article by W. A. Croffut, the well-known newspaper correspondent, entitled "The Birth of a New Party," Alvan S. Southworth describes "The New State of Congo," and its importance to the trade and commerce of the world. The Egyptian question comes in for its share in the arcicle on Col. F. G. Burnaby, with portraits of Burnaby and his wife, views of his home and scenes in his career. Popular science is provided in "A Feather," by Dr. Hans Gadow, with fifteen illustrations showing a feather in every possible form and stage of development. The story element is well kept up, Garrett Walker's serial, "The Death Mark," reaches its thirty-third chapter, and there are six short stories, "Braut shooting at Cape Cod," by Orville Deane will please the sportsman; the article on "Deaf mutes" the philanthropist; "In the Alsatian Mountains," by Katherine Lee, the traveler; and "The Vegetable Wonder of Mexico," by Emily Pierce, the botanist. All of these articles are illustrated, some of the pictures being very beautiful. There are several poems of considerable merit, and numerous short articles, interesting and timely. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

There is no more pleasing music than these jolly songs as sung by students; and any one who has ever had the opportunity of hearing these songs by college societies, glee clubs, or by groups of students will not be surprised to learn that a new edition of Moses King's collection has just been issued. Over 30,000 copies have already been sold. This remarkable sale is probably owing to the fact that nearly all these songs are to be found in no other collection. They are all fresh and copyrighted, and are the songs actually sung at all the colleges at the present time. There are sixty songs, with full music. The book is handsomely printed, sheet-music size, and is sold for fifty cents. The editor is William H. Hills, a recent graduate of Harvard; and the publisher is Moses King, of Cambridge, Mass., widely known as editor of "King's Handbook of Boston," "Harvard and its Surroundings," etc.

It is a curious fact that one of the most famous poems in our language appeared originally in a magazine that seldom touches poetry at all, and the same periodical, after an interval of sixty-six years, now brings out another poem very similar in theme. Bryant's "Thanatopsis," was first printed in the North American Review for September, 1817. The May number of the Review, just out has a poem by Robert Buchanan on "The New Buddha." The critics found fault with Mr. Bryant's poem on the ground that it was un-Christian; it remains to be seen what they will say of Mr. Buchanan's.

A fac simile of a map prepared by General Gordon in Khartoum, and with notes in his hand writing, forms a feature of Science for April 10. General Stone late of Egyptian service, writes the descriptive text, and Colonel Prout, who served with Gordon, contributes an article upon his character as an officer, showing the misconception of those persons who have supposed him to be a mere enthusiast. "The Climate of the Soudan," by an officer of long experience, and the "Route from Suakim to Berber," are recent articles in the pages of Science, the new scientific weekly. [$5 per year; 46 Bond Street, New York.]

The state public school at Coldwater received during the last year 253 children and placed in homes 310. The present number in the school is 239, with 60 boys and 34 girls out on trial. The total number not indentured is 333.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high Living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

RINK RACKET.

No more skating on Thursday. The rink will be opened only two days in the week during warm weather.

The hat carnival last Tuesday evening was largely attended, both by skaters and spectators. About twenty skaters competed for the prizes, and every variety of hat was represented, from the one six foot tall down to the one an inch in height. There were also several handsome hats worn by the ladies, among them being the one worn by Miss Gussie Whitenack, which took the prize, and also those worn by Misses Carrie Powers and Mina Olmstead. The prize for the smallest hat was carried off by Fred Tiffany. Darius Smith and George Waldron were not far behind him in matter of minuteness of hats. The tallest hat was worn by Levi Hayden and he will rejoice in the possession of a free pass to the rink for a month to come. The oddest, most unique, and probably most appropriate hat there that evening was that worn by Geo. Field. It represented an old fashioned mill, the motive power being furnished by wind, and the sails were kept in motion by the movement of the skater, making a very pleasing effect. Another handsome one was that worn by Charlie Whittier, representing a church steeple, and was illuminated. Taken all together we think the carnival was a great success and Manager Cash should favor us with another at an early day.

SHE WANTED A DIVORCE.

A spare, weazen-faced, peaked-nosed little woman dropped into the HERALD office the other day and enquired for Judge Stacy. She was attired in a green gingham dress, with an old style straw bonnet on and a big red bandana handkerchief tied about her neck. Upon being informed that the Judge was out of town, she quietly helped herself to a chair and informed us what the nature of her business was.

"I come up, young man, to see about getting a bill from old Jake. You don't know as much as the Judge, that's true; but I've seen you pettifog law suits down in Milan years ago, and you certainly ought to know somethin' about divorce law. Jake and I have bin quarrelin, for years. I want my way half the time and he allus insists on havin' his way all the time and it makes trouble in the family. 'Tother day I was arguin a pint with him at dinner table and wound him up—in fact, I allus git the better of him on logic—when he retaliated by jumpin' up and throwin' his chair at me full drive. Well, I seen the chair comin' and so I dodged, and the chair struck the tin baker and knocked it all to the dingbats. Now, square, don't you think them is good grounds for a divorce?"

We politely informed her that she committed a very grave mistake in dodging. If she, instead of the tin baker, had received the blow aimed at her with the chair, it would have been a valid ground for a divorce, but under the circumstances it looked as though the tin baker had more cause of complaint than she.

She accepted the advice thankfully, offering us a bushel of cider apples in payment, and departed, fully resolved to face the music manfully next time and take the chair.

The spring is here, and with it the carpet beater, the painter, paper hanger and calciminer, and the multitudinous discomforts of the house. If the men had the ordering of it, all such business would be attended to once in every twenty-five years.

Mrs. Maria L. Spafford, mother of George and Charles Spafford, died Tuesday morning at her residence in Brownville, at the advanced age of 82 years. Mrs. Spafford has been in failing health for several months, her ailment being a gradual wasting away of the vital powers. The funeral services were conducted at the house yesterday afternoon at three o'clock by Rev. Mr. Babbitt. A suitable obituary notice will appear in these columns soon.

John R. Clark arrived at home last Saturday and will remain a few days at his family hearthstone. He has just completed a very successful lecture tour of three months in Ontario, having spoken in all the principal towns of both upper and lower Canada. He does not confine himself wholly to lecturing on temperance, but has several other lectures in his repertoire, which he uses as occasion demands. After a few day's rest and recreation at home, he commences another lecture tour in New York.

A Georgia farmer leased some land last year to a colored man for a third of the crop. A severe drought cut the crops short, and the negro gathered only two bales of cotton and two wagon loads of corn. The latter was stored and the cotton sold. When the landlord called for his share he was told that there was none for him. He asked, in surprise, "Didn't I rent you my land for a third of the crop?" "Yes, boss," said the darky, "but you see dere was no third. Dere was only two bales of cotton and two loads of corn; all mine, and nuffin for you by de contract."

An Oakland county flour mill turns out "Minnesota" patent flour. All the wooden nutmegs are not made in Connecticut.

Frank Beaman captured an eel three feet in length in the Quaker mill pond last Tuesday evening. A good many may think this a good eel of a fish story, but we assure them that it is the truth in every particular.

The Kelley's Corners correspondent of the Brooklyn Exponent, writes: "On Monday morning as J. Dubois started the water wheel to his mill, he found it full of eels; they caught a large number and dressed them, some weighing 4 pounds apiece.

Adrian Press: Tramps take the Tecumseh HERALD counting room for a beer shop. When they see Scove's portly form though, they conclude that he keeps mighty poor beer, and they hunt up a shop where it is liable to be better, and have more "body."

Morenci Observer: The farm residence of John B. Lowe in Medina township caught fire from a supposed "defective flue" Thursday afternoon, and was entirely burned up, together with a large portion of the household goods. Insured for $1,000 in the Farmers' Mutual of Lenawee county.

We are indebted to W. G. Bryant, editor of the Deaf Mute Mirror, for the sixteenth biennial report of the Michigan Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Flint. The school is in a flourishing condition and is doing a grand work for the unfortunate class for whose benefit it was established.

The Adrian Times suggests that Congressman Eldredge recommend the appointment of Willard Stearns as pension agent of the eastern district. It would be a very suitable appointment, and we believe would give general satisfaction to the Democracy of this section.

Bro. Schemerhorn of the Gazette, and Bro. Allen of the Observer, two of Lenawee's veteran journalists, are no more, but their sons take up the pens their sires laid down, and the papers continue to interest their readers as of yore. Worthy mantles the young journalists wear.

This is his first visit to that enterprising city, and we can assure the good people of Coldwater that they will not regret it, if they give him a rousing reception. Mr. Clark is to-day one of the best temperance advocates on the American platform. He will be at Dexter four nights next week, and will be at Hudson on the Sunday and Monday following.

James Lowry has adopted a new scheme which his customers will doubtless approve. He has issued 3000 tickets, one of which will be given to every purchaser of a dollar's worth of groceries at his store. The holder of these tickets will be presented with a beautiful cottage organ, worth $120, which will be given to them on the 2d day of November next when they can take possession of the property and dispose of the same as they may think proper.

Elmer Bradley, of Macon, died last Saturday of consumption, aged about twenty-five years. He has been gradually failing for several months, and during the fall and winter Mr. Alfred Lewis, administrator of his fathers estate, hired his board where he was well taken care of. On the first of February, Mrs. Isaac Pennington, whose son Willie fell a victim to the same dread disease a few months ago, took Elmer to her own home and carefully nursed him with all the fondness of a mother, until death came to his relief. Mrs. Pennington's action was purely a labor of love, and she refused any compensation from the administrator for her trouble. It was an instance of self sacrifice which is rarely seen and which deserves public recognition.

JOSHUA GUMBO PLANTS A TREE.

Jerusha Gumbo had cleared off the supper table, knocked the handle off the water pitcher, and mixed the pancake batter on Friday evening and seated herself to toe out a pair of barber-pole stockings for Sally; Joshua had lighted his corn-cob pipe and planted himself in the big arm chair to smoke and growl, when the conversation turned upon Arbor Day.

"I say, Joshua," said Mrs. Gumbo as she adjusted her spectacles and picked up a lost stitch, "have you read the Governor's proclamation on Arbor Day?"

"The Gov'ner's declamation on bee'ber day, what in canopys' that?"

"Why, Joshua, what a fool you are! The Governor has made a public proclamation to which the great seal of the State is transfixed, appointing Saturday as a day for the planting of trees. He calls upon all the good people of Michigan to honor the custom established by Gov. Bagley, to meet in their door yards and on their farms, armed with shovel and spade, and plant out trees. It is a beautiful custom and we ought to observe it. There is'nt a tree in our front yard, not a tree, not even a weeping willow or a castor bean. Last summer, you know, we had one hollyhock near the gate, and a morning glory over the pantry window, but these impart no shade on a hot summer's day. We must have a maple or chestnut or mountain ash, some tree of a poetical and æsthetic character, to grow up and shade the front gate. We may not live to enjoy it ourselves, Joshua; but our ancestor's will."

"Why, hang it, Jerusha, be you crazy? I ain't no grave digger. What'n canopy d've want a tree sot out for? Why, woman we don't own this ere house and lot. Its only rented and the rent's behind now. No knowin when we'll git notice sarved on us to quit. Sally is only ten years old. It'll be six years sartin, afore she'll have any beaux to hang on the front gate, and you'n I'll both be in our graves afore that time."

"Well, Joshua, I do not care to bandy words on the subject. I am a loyal woman and this family must preserve the Governor's proclamation. I shall take the necessary steps in the morning to provide a proper receptacle for a tree in the front yard, and if you fail to plant a tree in that hole before sunset, I will plant you in it. You may select some useful rather than an ornamental tree if you prefer, but a tree must be planted on these premises to-morrow. I have set my foot down and that ends it. Do you hear, Mr. Gumbo?"

"Gewhitaker, when a woman sets her foot down, I spose thats the end on't. I'll plant a tree."

Mrs. Gumbo had breakfast served promptly at six o'clock on Saturday morning, and Joshua hustled himself to hunt up a tree. After breakfast Jerusha drafted Sammy and Sally into the service. A spade was borrowed from one neighbor, a crowbar from another, and these, with an old adz found in the woodhouse, were the utensils used to excavate a suitable hole for a tree. At high noon the excavation was dug, some salt and ashes were sprinkled in the bottom of the pit, the soil was saturated with brine from the pork barrel, and everything was in readiness for the tree.

Joshua failed to come to dinner. Three o'clock came, and four, and five and still he lingered. Mrs. Gumbo's heart went down to zero and she began to fear that Joshua had eloped. But as the clock struck six he appeared with a beautiful tree on Lon Chapman's dray. The family all turned in to help and just as the sunshine faded from the tilobe Mill cupola the tree was planted. Even the baby watched the process through the kitchen window and clapped its little hands in glee.

"The fact is," said Gumbo, as he sat down to his bread and water and apple sauce. "I've had a bustin' old day on't. I've bin runnin'n runnin'n runnin since I got out this morning, and I b'lieve I've traveled forty miles. I visited all the groves in the neighborhood, and I went down to Pennington's nursery, and I hunted up the fellers what sell's shade trees, and finally I struck Ed. Pritchard, who plants trees for a business and keeps 'em for sale. He had maples 'n elms 'n evergreens 'n weepin willers 'n mountain ashes, and lots of fancy kinds with dictionary names to 'em. I picked out one for both beauty and use. Ed. warrants it to be a genoine applesass tree. Why, hang it, Jerusha, it'll shade the hull door yard in three years, and bear applesass enough to run the hull family. It begins cuttin teeth at two years old, and at five years old it'll bear three full crops 'o applesass in one summer, and when it oust starts in, it jest keeps on bearin 'n bearin 'n bearin. Why, hang it, it'll whittle down the grocery bills twenty per cent. The fact is, I've had the blues for the past six months, but I'm feelin chipper to-night. I haint felt so good since uncle Reuben sent us that bar'l of new cider. The clouds is beginnin' to scatter, and I can see a streak 'o blue sky once more. Whar's my poetry machine? Grind her out now, old gal, to the chune of "Then and Now."

THEN

When the Shanghai crows in the rosy morn
And the whip-poor-will whips with glee,
And the hewgag sounds its warning horn,
It gives no joy to me.

When the mugwump skips in the hollow log
And the wood chuck sits in the tree,
And the pollywog skips in the cranberry bog
My heart is sad in me.

When the bullyhuch roosts on the butternut limb
And the buzz of the bumble bee
Goes echoing over the vale and hill,
It brings no mirth to me.

When the jovial snagpup loons his food,
And the katydid shapes its knee,
And the bullfrog blows his nine-horn,
My heart is sad in me.

When the green-bug pants from the owner's yard gate
And the cow of the neighbor's lea
Goes meandering down my spinal chute,
It brings no joy to me.

When the cuttle-fish cuts its mindin' up
And the cricket croaks over the lea,
And the beetle buttons its tiny wings,
My heart is sad in me.

NOW

But Arbor Day dates a new era in life,
My conscience is clear as the sea;
My duty is done, the victory won,
For I've planted an applesass tree.

The sky, it is blue as the grass, it is green;
My heart is now jolly and free,
And the gentle-faced moon beams upon me serener
For I've planted an applesass tree.

Neither chestnut, nor hemlock, nor maple, nor pine,
Can lavish their beauties on me;
Begone with your willow, your walnut and vine!
I've planted an applesass tree.

Now let the owl hoot and the skagpopper toot,
Let the buzzard buzz over the lea;
Than Gumbo, you can't find a gayer galoot,
For I've planted an applesass tree.

They set a value on official honors in Macon. At the late election Mrs. Rachel Howell was declared elected to the office of school inspector. Now comes C. E. Triplet, opposing candidate on the republican ticket, with a notification to the township clerk that he is prepared to contest and will contest the election. The vote for the office resulted in a tie and in drawing the lady won the position. The other man is dissatisfied with the result of the tie and says it should be a Triplet. Ridgewayans once had a squabble in the circuit court over the title to the town clerkship. Macon may furnish a similar case.

The Milwaukee Sunday Telegraph of April 19th has the following:

Harry P. Spaulding was married to Miss Sarah Adlam, daughter of Capt. S. J. G. Adlam, 292 Lyon street, Wednesday evening, April 15. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Naughton, of St. John's cathedral. Only relatives were invited. The young couple received many beautiful gifts.

The friends of Harry Spaulding here in his old home will cheerfully join with us in extending the customary congratulations, hoping that he may have chosen as wisely as we know the bride has done.

Adrian Times: Mr. Arthur Green, of Raisin, was quite seriously injured by being thrown from a roller on Thursday of last week. He was driving a spirited team, and the roller struck a stone, throwing him under it. No bones were broken, but his shoulders and face were so badly bruised that he has been unable to sit up since.

A proclamation was issued by President Cleveland in the 6th revenue, President Arthur's Executive order of February 23, which restored to the public domain the lands of the Old Winnebago and Crow Creek Indian reservation of Dak ta. In the proclamation he says this step is taken after careful examination of the Indian treaties bearing upon the subject, fortified by an opinion of the Attorney General, deciding that all those lands were treaty reservations. President Arthur had no lawful power to restore them to the public domain. He also warns all persons occupying these lands to remove from them within sixty days.

Commander M. Ca'a telegraphed to the Secretary of the Navy that he has reached the Isthmus and found transit open. The political condition is quiet, and the recall of the marines for the present is deemed advisable.

The resignation of William H. McCleary as postmaster at Pittsburgh causes quite a surprise in political circles. Nine months of the term of his commission are unexpired, and this action on his part, it is said, has for its object the giving to the friends of the Democratic party advantage over another in securing the new appointment.

PERSIAN MARRIAGES.

Love at first sight is unusual in a country where the women are habitually veiled, and a glimpse even of a lady's face is seldom to be got save by stratagem or by what is considered immodest—the raising of the corner of her veil by the lady herself. Shrouded as she is from head to foot in an immense sheet of blue, two yards square, a yet further precaution must be taken. Over all this is placed the rub-band or veil—no transparent or flimsy device, as in our own lace "fall," or the thin and gauzy yashmak of the Turkish belle, serviceable alike to triumphant and to fading beauty. The rub-band is a piece of white calico or cambric, a yard long, which hangs down like a long mask in front of the Persian woman's face, when clad in her hideous and purposely unbecoming out-door costume; which costume, sad to say, is also an impenetrable disguise. In it all women are alike. An aperture four inches long, running transversely across the eyes, enables the Persian lady to see the way, and little more. For even this aperture is covered by an elaborate and curious embroidery, between the threads of which she can only peep. But the Persian belle will yet find a way of rewarding an admirer with a glance; and thus the marriage so carefully brought about by parents and relatives are not infrequently the result of predilections slyly manifested. The out-door dress, being a disguise, cuts both ways, and the intriguante amuses herself with impunity.

Certain marriages take place because in the eyes of the Orientals they are natural ones, such as the union of first cousins. The children have been like brother and sister from the cradle, and they are married as a matter of course; it is their fate, and they submit to it. But outside these marriages of custom, and far more numerous than the marriages of predilection to which we have referred, are the marriages usually arranged by "brokers." These brokers are old women who always keep themselves in a position to quote the state of the market, which fluctuates. In hard times even girls of good appearance are comparatively a drug. In time of plenty they "rule firm." The marriage broker is ever a welcome guest where there are daughters to marry, and also in houses where the sons wish to find a suitable bride. The young people are not consulted by the broker. She deals with the parents, and generally with the mothers. Crafty as a horse-dealer, she runs glibly over the various advantages, mental, physical and pecuniary, of her clientele of both sexes. So-and-so is a steady, quiet man. Such an one has brilliant prospects—has (important consideration) no other wife. As for Yusuf, how good-looking he is! And Hassan, no man was ever so good-tempered. Of the other sex she sings the praises no less. The skill of Bebe as a housekeeper; the wealth of the ugly daughter of the banker; the dangerous charms of the portionless Zuleikha, she can never say too much about. Her main business is to bargain for the sum to be paid to the father for his daughter's hand; a sum which is usually expended by that father in pots and pans (all of copper) and other utensils, which he presents to his child as her separate property. The details being settled after much haggling, the young people are engaged and the marriage-broker gets her permission, both from the parents of the bridegroom and those of the bride-elect. Among the poor and the laboring classes the bargain is arranged on other grounds. The peasant takes a wife for her thews and sinews, or her skill at weaving carpets or making cheese; while the bridegroom is or is not eligible according as he may be capable of hard work, or may hold some small office, or have a bit of land or a shop. Here the "marriage-broker" is generally an amateur who conducts the negotiations purely from that love of match-making which is such a blessing to the world.

The akd, or marriage contract, is simply a legal form; but it is marriage and not betrothal. A few friends are invited. The bride—perhaps a child of ten—is seated in a room with her parents and relations; over the door hangs the usual curtain. Or, if the ceremony takes place in one room or the open air, the women are veiled. At the other side of the curtain, in an outer room or in the open air, are the male guests; and here squats the moollah or priest of the quarter, who now drones out in a monotonous voice the marriage contract which has been previously drawn out by him. "It is agreed between Hassan the draper, who is vakeel (agent) for Houssein, the son of the baker, that he Houssein, hereby acknowledges the receipt of the portion of Nissa, the daughter of Achmet the grocer." Here follows a list of the property of the bride in lands, moneys, houses, cattle, dresses, furniture, carpets, pots, pans and so on. Always a copy of the Koran and a certain weight of sewing silk are mentioned. This detailed account of her property, constituting the woman's separate estate, her husband merely holds in trust during their cohabitation. At death or divorce it goes back again to herself or her heirs. And it is in—member, or separate estate, that renders secure the otherwise precarious position of the Eastern wife in a polygamous county; for the various things enumerated, though acknowledged by the husband as received, may only exist on paper. Still he has acknowledged them, and if he wish to put away his wife, or if they separate by consent, he is bound to refund the money of which he has legally acknowledged the receipt, or to obtain her legal discharge for the same. "And," continues the moollah, "he acknowledges the receipt of the aforesaid money." Then follows a hum of delight at the extent of the lady's property. "You, Hassan, how do you say as vakeel for Houssein—is this so?" "Yes, yes, I agree," mumbles Hassan. "And you, Achmet, do you give your daughter, Lady Nissa, to be the wife of Lord Houssein?" "Yes, yes, I agree," replies Achmet, the grocer. "And you, Lady Nissa, are you there?" "Yes, yes, she is here, moollah," replies a chorus of women from behind the curtain. "And you agree, Lady Nissa?" Here there is a giggle from the child-bride. "Yes, yes, she agrees," comes in a triumphant chorus from the women. "Then," says the moollah, solemnly, "In the name of God the compassionate, the merciful, and of Mohammed the prophet of God, I declare you, Lord Houssein, and you, Lady Nissa, to be man and wife." Here the moollah puts his stamp or seal to the document; the various parties seal it too. It is carefully witnessed, and formally completed. The moollah receives his fee of a few shillings, and then and not till then, he hands over the document—"her settlement and marriage lines" in one—to the agent of the bride or to her father.

The legal ceremony is over, the young people are married fast—fast as the Mohammedan law can bind. And, theoretically, as yet they have never seen each other's faces. But really Houssein has had many a glimpse of the fair Nissa. Her mother has often allowed him to see her child from behind a curtain or a cupboard door. All this is understood. And the young people are now legally married. The wedding, as distinct from the espousals, may take place the same evening, a week, a month, or not for years, according to the age, rank, or circumstances of the bride and bridegroom. Men and women feast separately; and after many water-pipes have been smoked, many pounds of sweetmeats consumed, and a plentiful banquet has been disposed of, the guests separate. All promise to be present at the actual wedding. No music, no rejoicings—nothing but what we have described is seen at the ceremony we have detailed.—St. James' Gazette.

AMERICAN TOWNS.

A Chance For Improvement in Their Nomenclature.

David Dudley Field has been showing himself to be a man of good taste and judgment by remarks he made in a recent lecture on the names of American towns. Mr. Field objected to the manner in which many places in the United States have been christened. The natural supposition, he thinks, would be that the names were selected by a half civilized people. He pities the unhappy lot of the inhabitants of villages afflicted with such names as You Bet, Pop Corn, Wild Cat, Cut Shin, Big Coon, Toad Vine, Black Jack, Skunk Lake, Buzzard Roost, Cat Creek, Dirt Town, Doctor Town, Jug Tavern, Cow Skin, and Cut Off, all of which he found in the list of names in a railway guide.

Such names are certainly bad enough. They are striking instances of absurd nomenclature because of their grotesque singularity. But they are not such violations of good taste as can be found among the pretentious towns of New York. When one goes among the Romes, Troys, Utcas, Syracuses, Ithacas and the many other classical names that renders the map of that State ridiculous, he feels that he could go a considerable distance out of his road to kick the pedants who named them.

Of all names given to towns, that of Rome, an imitation of the eternal city, is the most inappropriate and absurd. There can be but one Rome. Its name applied to any other town or city is a ridiculous affectation and conceit. The New York Rome through the pedantry of its founders missed an appropriate name, and one of which its citizens could be proud, in not being called Fort Stanwix, a designation similar to that of Fort Wayne, which would have associated it with an interesting revolutionary event that happened in that locality. Utica, which as a matter of taste is almost as shocking a name to be imitated as that of Rome, would not today be a blemish to the map of New York if its founder would have had good taste and sense enough to have adopted the term Oneida, which is appropriate to the neighborhood. There is only one other name as applied to a modern town, and particularly to an insignificant town, that is pedantically as bad as Rome, and that is Athens. The nomenclature of places in this country is generally bad, but nowhere else equal in that respect to New York, where the idea seems to have prevailed that stilted titles taken from a classical dictionary were just the thing.

Mr. Fields recommends Indian names. They certainly have the advantage in point of originality, but many of them are barbarous in sound and almost unpronounceable, which is clearly objectionable in the name of a town. This is especially the case with the New England Indian names. Father Wells made a nice mess of it when he christened the ships of the navy after them during the war, making the list of the National vessels such a barbarous jargon that it was enough, in connection with Republican management, to ruin that branch of the National defense.

Mr. Fields very properly objects to "ville" at the end of the name of a town. There is an unreasonable prejudice against the word "town," and a mistaken notion that the substitution of "ville" for it is an improvement. This is an error of taste as well as of judgment. "Town" is an expressive, euphonious and very suitable term. "Jonestown" sounds better than "Jonesville." There is more ring in it, and it is divested of the absurdity of attempting to ornament a very common name with a French termination.

A new horror that is springing up in town nomenclature is the use of the term "city" as applied to insignificant places. It is the offspring of ignorance, conceit and bad taste. The Post-office Department when asked to use it in naming post-offices should sternly put its foot down on the monstrosity. What could be more absurd than Smith City?

It is about time that a movement should be made for reform in the application of names to the towns of this country. The Post-office Department could do much good in this matter. As the town nomenclature now stands it is a disorderly collection of incongruous names ranging from Red Dog to Rome, making a map of the country as ludicrous as a comic almanac. A wide field for improvement in this respect is opened, which should be no longer neglected.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot.

MR. GILL'S DAUGHTER.

Poor Katie! A great sufferer she was, and most patiently did she endure in the hope that at last her sufferings would come to an end. She was just budding into womanhood; a fine-looking girl of nearly nineteen, who had, previous to her attack of illness, enjoyed robust health.

Let her mother tell the story, as she told it to two of our editorial friends who recently spent an evening at the house.

"Katie's illness came on slowly, with great pain in her thigh and hip. For a while she kept on going to school, but the pains became so severe that she had to stay at home, and most of the time lie down on a little lounge here in the sitting-room. We tried the best physicians we could get. The disease baffled them all. One said it was ulceration of the thigh bone, and wanted to have the poor child undergo a terrible operation. It turned out to be sciatic rheumatism. Poor child! how she did suffer! About four o'clock in the afternoon she would begin screaming with pain. She couldn't help it. She would scream and moan till about four in the morning. Then she would fall asleep from weariness, and sleep for some hours. This went on for about eight months. During the nights neither she nor I could sleep.

"Katie was a great reader. One day, in a paper, she saw an advertisement of Athlophoros. She asked me to get it and see if it wouldn't cure her. We had tried a good many different things, but I thought we would try this. And I went and got a bottle. I gave her a dose of it towards evening. It was simply wonderful how it quieted the poor child's pain and put her into a gentle sleep. She slept nicely until ten. Then she was in a great perspiration. She waked, and I gave her another dose, for the first one had done her so much good. Then she fell asleep again and slept till morning. Her pain was gone. She had hardly any returns of it. The Athlophoros did the work for her most completely.

"But the terrible sciatica had drawn Katie's leg up, and made it shorter than it had been, by several inches. She was lame for life, although the rheumatism was all driven out of her. She had to walk on crutches. One day she fell down stairs and was so badly hurt that she had to be taken to the hospital. There she suffered a great deal, and after some weeks she died.

"Father Tscheider, of the Paulist Fathers, saw much of Katie during her illness, and knows all about us. Go and ask him, and he will tell you all about it.

Some time ago we gave a letter about Katie's case, and it was published. We have had numerous inquiries in reference to it, all of which we promptly answer.

"'I must tell you,' continued Mrs. Gill, 'of our neighbor, Mrs. Summers, and her eleven-year old boy. The boy had one of the most terrible attacks of rheumatism I ever knew a boy to have. I had a little Athlophoros left in the bottle from which Katie had taken. I gave it to Mrs. Summers, and she gave it to the child who was screaming with pain. When Mr. Summers came home, he was surprised to find the boy sitting up, free from pain, and cheerfully singing. I wish you would go and see them. They live not far from here, on West 12th street, No. 905."

Mr. Gill added in his own behalf:

"I have had a good deal of rheumatism myself, chiefly in my shoulders and arms. But I took Athlophoros and I got rid of the trouble. I did not have to take much either. I found the medicine acted very quickly."

The Rev. Father Peter Tscheider, assistant pastor of the Church of the Holy Family, was found at his pastoral residence, No. 417 West 12th street, Chicago. Father Tscheider took pleasure in saying that he knew Mr. and Mrs. Gill, and that he esteemed them highly; also that he had seen Katie frequently during her illness, and knew all about her wonderful recovery from sciatica, and her subsequent injury and her illness at the hospital.

Caught by an Octopus.

A diver who was trying to find pearls off the Alaska coast, found none but found himself, all of a sudden, in the grasp of an ugly octopus with arms twenty-seven feet long. Such an experience is rare; but there are thousands of people who are caught by dyspepsia, which is quite as bad. An octopus hates to let go. So does dyspepsia. Brown's Iron Bitters settles dyspepsia, and makes it loose its cruel grip. Mrs. Schmidt and her daughter, of 136 Conway street, Baltimore, were both cured of dyspepsia by the use of Brown's Iron Bitters.

Medical Value of Wines.

As a general rule the use of wine is not necessary for young or adult persons in good health, breathing country air and not exposed to ovarwork. As however life advances and the circulation becomes languid, natural red wine used in moderation, becomes an essential article and in many cases absolutely necessary but it must be the pure product of the grape. And even in the Eastern States the physician meets large numbers of town people, especially women, who cannot dejest the food and drinks suited to out-door laboring people. In such cases they resort to the beverage of tea, which gives rise to a distressing dyspepsia. The Wines produced in New Jersey, especially the Burgundy and the Port Grape Wines from Alfred Speer's Vineyards, at Passaic, N. J., are the more reliable and most sought after by those who travelled and know what wines are.

John Jones lives on the town line between Riga and Ogden, at the point where the Big Raving crosses from one township to the other. The ditch being uncompleted beyond Jones farm, naturally the water coming from Ogden does great damage to his land. The town board of Riga ordered Jones to fill the ditch, which he did. Now comes the Ogden highway commissioner and brings suit against Jones for obstructing a public waterway. The case came on Monday, but was adjourned for four weeks. Prosecuting Attorney Saulsbury represents the people of Ogden, Riga town board backs up Jones claiming the ditch is an illegal one. The fight promises to be interesting.—Blissfield Advance.

We have received a copy of the Michigan Manual, or red book for 1885. Conant, Secretary of State, and issued by W. S. George & Co., state printers.

OBITUARIES

One of Franklin's best men is gone, and Deacon Langdon is no more among us. He entered into rest on Friday April 10 1885. For some time his health had been failing and he said to some of his friends that he might be taken away without any warning and so it happened. On the morning named he went to Tecumseh to consult with Dr. House in reference to his youngest daughter, who is quite sick, and within a moment or so after getting into the Doctor's office he quietly passed away to his reward.

Henry W. Langdon was born in Venna, Oneida County, N. Y., May 18, 1807. He came to Michigan in the year 1831. He located in the fall of this year and then returned to New York, coming back the following spring. From 1832 to the time of his death he resided in the same place. In the year 1837 he experienced considerable difficulty in securing help to raise his log house. It was thoroughly understood that no whisky would be provided. He succeeded, however, in raising the house. He was converted to God when 17 years old and united with the Presbyterian church in his neighborhood. When he came to Michigan he brought a letter of dismission and joined the church of his choice in Tecumseh, frequently walking from home to church and back. A Presbyterian church was formed in Franklin in 1836 and Mr. Langdon was one of its first members. Some 2 years before the organization of this church he started a Sunday School and was its Superintendent for many years. In 1848 the church assumed the polity of the Congregational church and from that year until a few years ago our departed friend was its clerk, and nearly as long one of its deacons. He was always an active christian and a diligent student of his bible. His church greatly misses him as does also the Sunday School. The Sabbath before his death he assisted in the communion service, and the members say it will be strange to have an other communion and no Deacon Langdon. The church was filled at his funeral which took place on Sunday the 12th inst. No text could perhaps have been more appropriate than the one selected by the pastor for the occasion "For to me to live is Christ and to die is gain." He rests from his labors; his works follow him.

Sally Harmon departed this life at her family home in the town of Macon, on Sunday, February 22, 1885. Aged 70 years, 9 months and 4 days.

The deceased maiden name was Sally Burgess. She was born May 18, 1814, in the town of Phelps, Ontario County, N. Y. At the age of 18, she was married to Ebenezer Harmon, her surviving husband, on the 22nd day of October, 1832. June 4, 1834, they embarked upon a boat on the Erie Canal coming to Buffalo, there they boarded a steamboat and came to Detroit, then hired a team to Plymouth, remaining there until the 24th day of June, hiring a man by the name of John Westfall to bring them to Macon their new home, arriving there on the 25th day of June, 1834, settling and remaining on the same farm until her death. Mrs. Harmon was the mother of three children, one son and two daughters who have grown up to manhood and womanhood, and have children of their own. She leaves 9 grandchildren and one great grandchild. The deceased was a firm Universalist in her religious belief. Her husband mourns the loss of a loving and dutiful wife, her children are bereft of a kind and devoted mother, her grandchildren feel the loss of their grandmother very much, and the neighborhood in which she lived has lost a kind and affectionate neighbor. In her younger days she was always ready to help those that she thought needed help. The deceased had always enjoyed good health until two years ago this spring, when she was taken with intermittent fever which seemed to be the ague. This trouble continued during the entire season. She tried five different physicians but obtained no permanent relief. About five weeks before her death she contracted a violent cold and rapidly grew worse until the end came.

Life was a blessing to her whilst she had her health, and yet she had no fears of death. She had no anxiety in regard to the future, but died as the righteous die, trusting and hopeful, commending herself unto the care of an All Wise Father, who doeth all things well and is infinite in justice, infinity in mercy, and infinite in love.

PASTRY WITHOUT BUTTER.

The American pie has been subjected to more unjust abuse from foreign writers than any other of our distinctive products, if we except the recent tirade against the American hog. And yet we cannot say that it has been altogether undeserved, because of the villainous compound, thick, hard and heavy, this is too often made to do duty as a "crust," and which by courtesy is called "pastry." Light tender, flaky, and digestible pie crust and all kinds of pastry, can be made most readily by the use of Royal Baking Powder without any butter, or with half the usual portion, if prefered, or with a small quantity of lard or other shortening as desired. Pie crust thus made is much more wholesome and digestable, besides being more economical and easily prepared. In addition to saving all the butter if desired, one-third the flour is also dispensed with, as the crust is rolled that much thinner, the leavening qualities of the Royal Baking Powder enabling it to be requisite thickness. If drippings or lard be used the Royal Baking Powder removes any unpleasant taste, rendering the crust as short, sweet and pleasant as if made from the finest butter. Those who know the appetizing qualities of the genuine home made American pie will recognize that by the aid of Royal Baking Powder in the pastry it can be made quite as digestable as it is delicious.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Mr. Nelson Miller, of Ridgeway, was in town last Saturday.

E. R. Smith returned from New York last Friday. He has a fine stock of wall paper, besides new goods in every other department of his store.

Several Tecumseh people improved the fine weather last Sunday by driving to Clinton. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Cook and W. T. Eccles and wife.

Seth Bradner, of Toledo, is visiting at his father's, J. P. Bradner.

George Vanticison now rides in a dog-cart. We presume that the reason for the change in vehicles is that the girls will now be less apt to tease him for a ride.

Miss Lizzie Brooks returned from Galt, Canada, last Friday night, where she has been taking a course of instruction in music.

Miss Lou Brown has been obliged to retire from the millinery firm of Brown & Kilpatrick; on account of ill-health. Miss Ida Brown will fill the vacancy.

Mat. Blosser, of Manchester, made a short visit to Clinton last Friday.

Mrs. C. S. Burroughs visited Mrs. E. M. Conklin, of Tecumseh, last week.

C. F. Field and family visited at J. S. Kies' over Sunday.

Miss Lottie Bigelow, of Coldwater, has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. W. P. Wastell.

Mrs. Augusta Brooks expects to close her house here and make her home with her aunt, Mrs. Mather, of Tecumseh, during the summer.

Mrs. C. K. Spafford, who has been suffering for several months with lung trouble, died at her home last Friday morning. The funeral was from the residence on Sunday at 2 P. M. and from St. Peter's Episcopal church in Tecumseh at 3 P. M.

Henry Lancaster of the Lancaster House, was quite sick last week, but is much better now, so that he is able to be out.

M. S. VanDeMark has returned to Clinton.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The cold wave struck us Tuesday.

Somewhat cold for gardening.

Wm. DeMott, of Tecumseh, was in our village Monday.

Morris Kelley has improved the beauty of his place on South Church street, with a new fence in front of the house.

Miss Nettie Wilson, of Raisin, will teach the spring term of school in the Easlick Dist., Macon. She commenced Monday.

Mr. Dean Loree spent Monday and Tuesday with his sister, Mrs. Alfred Luckin, of Detroit.

Kittie Clark is on the sick list again, but is on the gain at present.

Mr. and Mrs. Triphagan moved their picture car to Pennington's corners Saturday, and will put on tin the smiling faces of Maconites for a few days.

Samuel Rappleye and Chas. Underwood exchanged farms on last week Thursday and will move soon.

We understand that the turn pike from here to Britton will be graveled soon, as they have purchased half an acre of gravel of S. H. Linn to do the graveling with. It is a fine scheme.

Mrs. G. W. Jackson went to Toledo Monday and got a supply of millinery goods.

Miss Belle Barlow, who is attending school at the college at Adrian spent Saturday and Sunday at her home and with friends. We are glad to learn that her health is improving.

Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Clack while returning from Tecumseh Friday afternoon, narrowly escaped from being seriously hurt, if not killed. As they were coming down the Globe mill hill the neck yoke broke and the team run nearly half a mile, and it was with a great effort and skillful management of the reins that the team was stopped without any damage.

The attendance at the Literary on Frida night was very large and the exercises passed off with credit to the society. The new six octave, Wilson & White organ sent by W. C. Sharp, of Brooklyn, came in time to be used. It is a fine toned instrument. The society will give a public entertainment next week Friday evening.

After a fifteen minute speech by Mr. Sharp and Larkin and a hearty laugh and considerable cheering by the lookers on, they voted to appoint a day to pay back the $1,000 to the tax payers of the district, but failed to name the day. It looks like a scheme on the part of the officers.

RIDGEWAY LITERARY.

The public entertainment to be given by the Ridgeway Literary society Friday evening May 8th will consist of the following program, with some slight change and explanation which will be noticed in the bulletin to appear in a day or two.

Music—Britton Band.

On Thursday evening May 14th, the entertainment will be repeated at Britton, the receipts to be equally divided between the society and the Britton band. Admission 20 cents, children under 15 years 15 cents.

See bulletin for particulars.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

'Engaged,' was played at Union hall Wednesday night by the Episcopal dramatic club, who are said to have done as well as the best, but because of small advertising, many even in the village failed to hear of it and the audience was not as large as could be wished for, so the play will be repeated Monday evening. One or two such experiments ought to convince the skeptical that the success of a righteous cause, depends largely on printer's ink.

More than the usual amount of moving is going on and no doubt spring thunder will be laid by for future emergencies, on account of the over supply of swear and stove-pipe. They are the most plentiful of spring indicators afloat, and though men have waited long for sunshine and work, many are yet idle and only favorites are selected to be cumbered with much serving.

Mr. Hemingway rests, after many years of labor, and was buried Sunday. Dr. Barton Spears survives but suffers from paralysis of mind.

The old style game of progressive euchre resulted in two weddings last week and another appointment for this, and one victim had his tent folded for him for convenience as it were, and has quietly stolen away.

The Official Count of the State

Total vote for Judge	307,580
Morse	168,635
Cooley	138,694
Morse's majority	29,931

For regents the result is:

Whitman	155,622
Field	154,425
Draper	138,353
McAlvay	136,605
Ellis, Pro	14,960
Cressey	16,080
Whitman's plurality	17,269
Field's	16,080

People generally, and even those who may be termed steady readers and close observers, have but a faint conception of the magnitude and influence the press of this country has attained. From a careful examination of the advance pages of the 1885 edition of the American Newspaper Directory, issued May 1st, by Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, it appears that there are 14,147 newspapers published in the United States and Canada; of these the United States has 12,973, an average of one paper for every 3,867 persons. In 1884 the total number of newspapers was less by 823 than at present, and while the gain this year is not so marked as in some previous years, it is still considerable. Kansas shows the greatest increase, the number being 78, while Illinois follows with a gain of 77. It is curious to notice that New York, the scene of so much political activity during the last campaign, should have only about one-third as many new papers as the State of Pennsylvania. As an index to the comparative growth and prosperity of different sections of the country, especially the Territories, the number of new papers form an interesting study, and may well occupy the attention of the curious.

The Detroit Post has thrown out gas and now uses the Edison electric light for illuminating purposes. In an extended article noting the change, the Post gives some facts and figures that are valuable. Many persons object to electric lighting on the score of cost, claiming that it cannot be furnished as cheaply as gas. Touching this point, the Post says:

It is difficult for the public to understand or believe that electric lighting for private and commercial purposes can be furnished at the same cost to the consumer as gas. In illustration of the fact some points of comparison may be noted. The New York gas companies in 1883 disposed of an output of 4,267,650 measured cubic feet of gas, the cost of which was $5,000,000, or $1.16 per 1,000 cubic feet. These figures represent the cost of gas manufactured in the largest quantities. At Lawrence, Mass., there is an Edison station which furnishes light through 2,700 lamps, at a cost of 87½ cents for 2,000 candles of light, equivalent to 1,000 feet of gas. This represents the cost of production with coal at $5 per ton, and proves that the Edison light is cheaper, where produced in a small scale, than gas in a large scale. It is a conceded fact that it is impossible to make a gas plant of less than 1,000 standard jets yield adequate return on the investment unless an exorbitant price be charged the consumer, whereas, with the Edison system, a plant of only 800 lamps can be made to pay good dividends, even when sold in competition with gas when consumed on a large scale.

The May Century will surpass all its predecessors in the number of its pages (176) and the enormous size of the first edition (250,000). Among the many valuable features are the vigorous account of the Peninsular Campaign, by Gen. Geo. B. McClellan, important contributions on the same subject by the following ex-confederates, Gen'ls Jos. E. Johnston, G. W. Smith and Jno. D. Imboden, also, an interesting paper on Gen. Grant, by Gen. Adam Badeau, and E. C. Steadman's essay on the poet Whittier.

ABDURRAHMAN KHAN.

Abdurrahman Khan, the Ameer of Afghanistan, was born in 1830 and is the eldest son of Azzul Khan and a grand son of Dost Mohammed who ruled Afghanistan until his death which occurred in 1863. His uncle, Shere Ali was deposed by the British during the invasion of 1879 and died in exile shortly after his expulsion. Before this Shere Ali was recognized by the English government and being antagonistic to Abdurrahman Khan caused the latter to flee the country and take refuge in Russia. His mother, wife and children were taken as prisoners and confined for many years at Candahar. Abdurrahan had married a daughter of the Ameer of Bohara, but such was the bitterness of Shere Ali's hate that the ruler of Bohara was unable to protect his son in-law therefrom. In this distress Abdurrahman saw in Russia his only refuge and he obtained a pension from that government amounting to 25,000 rubles per annum. In securing this grant he was greatly assisted by Gen. Kaufman, then commanding on the Turkish border. During his stay under Russian protection Abdurrahman resided at Samarcand. After the British invasion of 1879 and Shere Ali's fall from power Abdurrahman was finally chosen as his successor, receiving the support of the English and in consequence becoming a servant of the greater power. He received a subsidy of 160,000 £ per annum and as it was necessary for England to command Central Asia he received large grants of munitions of war and thereby was enabled to make his army formidable. The boundary line between Russia and Afghanistan has long been in dispute and to settle it a commission under Sir Peter Lumsden was sent out. Before however the boundary was settled a collision occurred between the Russians under Gen. Komaroff and the Afghans in which the latter were badly worsted. Whether this will lead to war between England and Russia remains to be seen.

The Adrian Record man calls it "alcoholic hilarity." That is is a very aesthetic and suggestive term, we admit, but we prefer the word bewilderment.—Tecumseh Herald. Just as you like. Anything in the world to oblige our editorial brother. As a sample item how would this answer: "We regret to chronicle that Scove Stacy, of the Tecumseh Herald, came to our city yesterday to see his fellow editors and have a good time with the boys, and was gathered in by the police about eleven o'clock P. M. in a state of rip roarous bewilderment. He fought the officers and knocked down little John Smith, the jailor, with a single blow of his brawny fist. He was caged with difficulty, and this morning was convicted of having been bewildered. Justice Long sent him to jail for 30 days, on learning that he was from Tecumseh, where a man lives who once gave the 'squire a bull-dog"—Adrian Record.

A book of more than ordinary interest is announced for publication early in May by Messrs. Cassell & Company. It is the "Life and Reminiscences of Gustave Dore," compiled from material supplied by his family and friends and from personal recollection, by Mme. Blanche Roosevelt. The story of the distinguished artist's life covers over 300 octavo pages with several hundred illustrations, many of them never before published. The author of this interesting volume has the advantage over many biographers, having known the subject of her book and having been in the confidence of his family and friends. The material she draws upon is all fresh and has come from the most authoritative sources. Where possible she has confined herself to the language of those who have had anecdotes to tell of the famous painter and this gives a delightful raciness to the story of his life.

SUBDUING AN ELEPHANT.

Swinging a Recalcitrant Quadruped in the Air to Bring Him to Reason.

It took a dozen men five days of last week to break the spirit of a vicious elephant in the water quarters of Adam Forepaugh's menagerie. Early in February one of Mr. Forepaugh's European agents bought four elephants and shipped them to this country. The huge beasts reached New York two weeks ago, and were at once transferred to Philadelphia. Three were docile, but the other, Ajax, is a tusker, eight feet high. Cousins.

On reaching Philadelphia he became sullen, but Jack Forepaugh, who has charge of the winter quarters, believing that the brute would become good natured in a day or two, tethered him to a post and locked him up in the dight. A few hours' fiber Ajax broke his chains, butted the iron-bound door of his room, and rushed into an apartment in which a dozen of the most peaceable elephants live. He attacked a performing elephant named Bazie and a desperate fight began. Five or six of the smaller elephants broke loose. Their frightened screams soon excited every animal in the buildings, and the air was filled with roars that aroused the neighborhood. The night keepers were afraid to attempt to separate Ajax and Bazie, who were trumpeting and charging at each other with great fury. When their huge bodies came together at the end of every rush the shock could be felt throughout the place.

Jack Forepaugh was sent for, but before he arrived the watchmen discovered that Ajax and Bazie were so engaged with each other that they did not heed what was going on about them. The doors were opened, and all the elephants except the fighters were driven out. By the time this was accomplished Mr. Forepaugh arrived. He has had thirty years' experience with wild animals and stands no more in fear of an elephant than an ordinary person does of a dog. Grasping an elephant hook—a spike and a hook on a handle—he ran between the furious beasts and ordered Bazie back. Bazie obeyed, but the blood of the new elephant was up and he charged on the man, who eluded him and fastened the hook in the beast's ear. Ajax turned and bore down upon him. The trainer stabbed him with a spike and dodged behind a post. Ajax butted the post down as though it was a reed. The other men ran to Mr. Forepaugh's assistance and assailed the elephant from so many points that he paused irresolute. During that pause a chain was passed about one of his hind legs and fastened to an anchored ring. This rendered him almost helpless. His other legs were hobbled, and he was left alone until daylight. Bazie being driven off to another part of the quarters.

On Tuesday morning Ajax was as sullen and vicious as ever. Bad elephants sometimes remain in this mood for days, and no man can approach them with safety. Until such an elephant's spirit is broken, he is worse than useless. Steps were at once taken to convince Ajax that he must obey his keepers. Of the thirty-six elephants under Forepaugh's care none was as hard to subdue as Ajax.

The work of conquering the proud spirit of Ajax began at nine o'clock on Tuesday morning, and ended shortly before noon yesterday. Beating has no effect upon a mad elephant. It only renders him more stubborn and wicked. The breaker's only hope is to convince such an animal that he is powerless against man. That accomplished, the beast becomes as docile as elephants ever are. On Tuesday morning four hawsers were passed through iron pulleys attached to beams under the roof. Then a set of harness, shaped something like a monster shawl strap, was fastened about Ajax's defiant body. The leather straps, which were three-ply thick, covered small chains. All the leather plates were copper-riveted and a foot wide. Ajax looked as though he were in armor after being encased. Three hours were spent in getting the harness on him, and during the job he slightly injured two of the keepers.

Through iron rings, supported by great chains, were passed the hawsers. Then a dozen men grasped two of the lines of rope that passed through pulleys and before Ajax knew it his hind feet were six feet above the ground, and he stood on his front ones in the most approved performing elephant style. For a moment he was paralyzed with astonishment, but surprise gave place to fury when he appreciated the ridiculous position he was in. He surged and trumpeted and flapped his ears, but all to no purpose.

When his struggles subsided some of the men ran off with the front ropes, and in a jiffy Ajax's body was suspended in the air. He made the most frantic efforts to tear the belting off with his trunk, but the chains between his fore legs and around his shoulders prevented it. There the monster brute hung as helpless as an infant. He was free to kick and plunge and butt the air as much as he pleased. From time to time he was lowered, so that he might rest his legs, but none of the men were allowed to approach or worry him. In the evening he was lowered and fed, and allowed to spend the night on the ground thinking over the indignities that had been put upon him.

After breakfast on the following morning he was trussed up as before. He resisted, but his efforts were unavailing. He was a stout-spirited brute, however, and the second day's punishment only seemed to increase his rage. When he came down to supper he was the maddest elephant that ever trumpeted in Forepaugh's winter quarters. At the sight of the harness on Wednesday he became greatly excited. Mr. Forepaugh said he was "coming to his senses." This, however, did not prevent him from being hoisted up again. He surged about less in his comfortable swing on Thursday, but otherwise he was as stubborn and dangerous as ever. An anchor was sunk five feet in the ground and covered with earth in another part of the quarters. Only a ring was exposed. Ajax's forelegs were hitched to the ring on Friday morning. Ropes were attached to his hind legs, which were then drawn out, leaving him "spread-eagled" on his stomach on straw.

Jack Forepaugh walked over Ajax's prostrate body every few minutes. The animal was let up and thrown down several times during the day. After three or four hours' experience of this kind Ajax knew me the next day, and he was quite docile when, in the evening, he was unchained and ordered to stand up. He was hobbled and thrown down on Saturday morning, and when his head touched the ground he cried out, and the tears trickled down his trunk. He was conquered. The chains were removed at once, and he got up quietly. At the word of command he walked into the room and broke off of one Monday again and was as meek as a sheep. Next week he will begin training necessary before he appears in public.—Philadelphia Times.

COUNTRY POST-OFFICES.

The Kind of Men Country Postmasters and Their Clerks Enjoy.

The uninitiated seem to think that we clerks in country post-offices have nothing to do just about all the time, and, though you may be somewhat surprised at the frankness of the confession, I am emboldened to admit that in a certain sense we have.

The mail has come, and I am awfully busy. In comes Claude Jones, and planting himself in such a position that no one else can get near the delivery window, he begins his cantata by asking:

"Is there any mail for Ira Jones?"

"No."

"Is there any mail for Wilbert Jones?"

"No. If there had been I should have given it to you."

"Is there any mail for John Jones?"

"No. There is no mail for any of the Joneses."

"Is there any mail for Lon Jones?"

"No. There isn't, there hasn't been, and what's more, there isn't likely to be." He looks at me with a blank sort of a suspicious stare and then gives the crank another turn with:

"Is there a registered letter for Stella Jones?"

I seize him by the hair. There is an unearthly yell, and an indiscriminate mass of boy's legs, ears and groans is piled up in the snow-drift in front of the store door.

Just now there steps up a man. He is an older person than Claude and must be treated with more consideration. He rubs his hands, squirts a handful of tobacco juice on the stove, and leads off. I know what he is coming for. I have gone through the same series of questions an answers with him two or three times a week ever since I came into the Post-office.

"There hain't no mail for me?" quite confidentially.

"No, sir."

"What! no letter?"

"No, sir."

"Well now, that's strange. I orter a' got a letter from my woman's father. He writes reg'lar every two weeks, an' we hain't heard from him for nigh onto a month. How d'ye account for it?"

"Pshaps the old man is sick," I venture.

"Sick! Huh! Urka! Never sick a day in his life. No, sir. It's some fault of the Post-office."

"Well, I am sorry, but, there is no letter here for you."

"Ha'n't there no postal card?"

"No, sir."

"Well, I was lookin' for a postal card from a seed house in Philadelphia. I wrote 'em a letter three weeks ago and I think it's about time I heard something from it."

I know there's just so much of it, so I let him go right on. He hitches up his trousers, and, looking me full in the eye, fonches off the fusillade as follows:

"Did there any box come for me?"

"No, sir."

"Well, it might be a little package. I didn't know just what shape it would come in. My woman's uncle down in the south part of the State was goin' to send her some slips of house plants, and I was a thinking that like enough they might be along this week."

"No, sir, there is nothing at all."

"Is there any registered mail?"

"No, sir."

"Well, I didn't expect any yet, but Old Pete Simons, down in Goshen, has been talkin' of sendin' me the money to pay the taxes on that old back forty on section seven, and I wanted to make sure so that it wouldn't be returned to the County Treasurer with the money here to pay it. You're sure there ain't no letter?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I guess I'd better be gettin' along, for I will be all-fired close to grub time 'fore I get home, 'n' the old woman is a powerful prompt hand about meals."

Perhaps you think that the agony is over, but I don't. In comes Bert Davis. He asks:

"Is there any mail for me?"

"No."

"Well, then," he says, "is there any fiend?"

Then he laughs and haw-haws, and giggles, and doubles himself all up with merriment. He thinks he has propounded the funniest joke of the season. This makes the three hundred and sixty-fifth time he has done the same thing in the last year, and always with the same side show of nonsensical performances. I am beginning to get sick of this sort of thing, so I stare at him very hard, and say in a chilling, north Siberian tone of voice:

"Did you say anything to me, sir?"

This seems to paralyze him. Heretofore I have always met his mirthful sallies with uproarious laughter, and he can not understand this sudden change. But I keep right on looking at him and he keeps growing smaller and smaller and smaller, and slowly edges away toward the door. My gaze is fixed steadily upon him, and by the time he gets out on the sidewalk he isn't bigger than a pint of yeast. He has gone away to die.—Jim Nash, in Detroit Free Press.

—Under the delusive idea that she will receive a large reward for 1,000,000 canceled postage stamps, a female resident of Newburyport, Mass., has succeeded in gathering half a million of them, and is eagerly striving for another 500,000.—Boston Journal.

USEFUL AND SUGGESTIVE.

—Michigan allows to each farmer who uses wind mills on his farm a rebate on his taxes.

—If you keep cows for making butter, teach each cow's milk separately and see if she is performing the work for which you keep her.

—Next to stagnant water on the surface, it is no more easy a matter of reflection of the lack of drainage of land than the growth of weeds which always grow in swamp lands. While these grow freely, the land is not adapted to the growth of any of the grasses of which are most valuable for hay or pasture. Good and thorough drainage, however, will change such conditions, also make better crops to grow.—Country Gentleman.

—A stone jug is very nice to keep butter in when it is to be sent any distance. When you wish to use it, make a dressing of a cup of chopped parsley, salt, pepper, and enough savory butter melted to make it a large sloppy mass. Take a large sharp knife, pull out the butter, and as you take the butter out put as much dressing as possible. Have a paste of flour and water ready and put it on edge over the hole left by the butter in the stone jug. To be eaten cold.—Exchange.

—Nice Dressing for Sandwiches: One half pound of sweet butter, two tablespoonfuls of mixed mustard, three tablespoonfuls of salad oil, a little red or black pepper, a small portion of salt and the yolk of one egg. Rub the butter to a cream, add the other ingredients, mix thoroughly and set away to cool. Chop lean boiled ham fine, mix well with the dressing, and spread your bread with a moderate quantity. These sandwiches are very nice for picnics or travelers.—The Household.

—Pancakes of Canned Lima Beans: Drain the liquor from a can of Lima beans, mash them through a colander with a potato masher or a wooden spoon; beat an egg smooth and put it with the mashed beans; together with a cupful of flour, a palatable seasoning of salt and pepper, and enough of the liquor in which the beans were preserved to form a thick batter; fry this batter on a hot frying pan, using sufficient butter to prevent burning, and serve the pancakes as a vegetable.—N. Y. Independent.

MAN'S INHUMANITY.

While the Almighty gave dominion over the lower animals to man by placing them unreservedly in their keeping, He imposed upon him the sacred duty of caring for and providing them with what was necessary for their comfort. While they are unreservedly in man's power, and he has the undoubted right to use them at his will for his profit and necessities, he is under the strictest moral obligation to see that they do not suffer for food, water, or shelter; and when it becomes necessary to transport them to market, or deprive them of life, he is bound to so perform these operations as to cause them the minimum amount of suffering from either want, fright, or pain. In no one thing does man so grievously sin as in his ill-treatment of the lower animals; nor is his cruelty confined to the Western plains.

As we have traveled through the older States and have seen the poor animals in a piercing wind or driving storm standing with their feet drawn close together, the backs arched like a barrel-hoop, and shivering so that one could almost hear their bones rattling together, we have almost wished we had the power to compel the owner to take their place, half clothed and hungry, for a single night, that he might in a measure realize the intense suffering he forces them to endure, not for one night only, but for the whole winter. It is no excuse that the number of a man's stock is so large that he can not provide them with food and shelter. No man has a right to own more than he can properly care for. Aside from the cruelty and sinfulness of this course, it is the worst kind of folly and bad management. We have not a doubt but the value of cattle lost the present winter on the Western ranges would be amply adequate to provide shelter for every animal, and the loss by death is but as a drop in the bucket to the actual depreciation of the survivors by the loss of flesh and thrift through their terrible exposure.—Rural New Yorker.

BUYING A FARM.

The Line Between Actionable and Non-Actionable Fraud Not Always Clearly Drawn.

A good deal of lying can pass as "trader's talk," without constituting actionable fraud. If the farmer selling his farm truly points out the boundaries he may declare that it contains a great many more acres than it really does, and that misrepresentation will not let the other out of his bargain. Where the agreement is for the sale of a farm containing a given number of acres at so much per acre, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether the purchaser is obliged to take the property when the number of acres fall short, but in most cases he would probably be released from his bargain. If the farmer says to the person to whom he sells: "That meadow will cut four tons of hay to the acre," or: "You can chop 250 cords of wood from that wood-lot," or anything of that sort, and the buyer finds that two tons of hay or 100 cords of wood is all that he actually gets the latter will learn by sad experience the uselessness of relying upon such representations. On the other hand, if the farmer selling says: "I have cut four tons of hay to the acre from that meadow," or, "I have raised 250 bushels of corn on that lot," etc., when, as a matter of fact, he has done no such thing, such misrepresentations would constitute actionable fraud and vitiate the bargain. The courts hold that one who is deceived into buying a farm by false statements as to how much the one selling paid for it, or how much another offered for it, is without relief at law. The line between actionable and non-actionable fraud is not always clearly drawn, but honest men will obey the law of conscience and not experiment as to how far they can go without incurring legal liability.—Prairie Farmer.

SURREPTITIOUS RIDES.

A Tramp Discusses the Various Methods of Securing Free Transportation.

"This is terribly bad weather to ride on the bumpers," said a sorrowful-looking tramp as he endeavored to thaw out his hands with his breath, and by slapping them together and holding them in his arm-pits. "It's a hard place to ride, because a fellow has to hold on all the time. If he should let go once he would drop off, and that would be the last of him. What do we ride on the bumpers for? 'Cause that's about the only place on a train a fellow can get these days where the brakemen won't bother him. The train men stick pretty close to the caboose this cold weather. If they would see one of us gentlemen on the top of a car, though, they'd come out long enough to put him off. So we ride on the bumpers and they don't see us. When the train stops we hop off, for the men come out then, and when it starts up we jump on again. It's tough sometimes, though, because a bumper is not upholstered like a seat in a palace car. Delaware and Lackawanna cars are the best for a fellow, because they've all got little platforms on both ends, and a traveler can ride on them like a daisy."

"Some fellows ride on the trucks under the cars," continued the tramp, as he blew on his hands again. "It's a hard place, though; it's so dirty. Another place is on a passenger train on the first platform. The engineer and fireman see us, but they don't care. It's the brakemen who bother the life out of us. Now, a person would think the first platform a good place to ride, but it isn't. The cinders are terrible. We have to fight 'em every minute. They get in our eyes if we keep them open, and if we shut our peelers the hot cinders fall on our broadcloth and burn holes in our garments.

"You've heard of the baker-shop racket, havent you? No. That's queer. You see we travelers sometimes get hungry, and then we work the bakery racket. We go into a bakery and ask for a job, pretending we're first-class bakers just out of work. We go around in the shop looking with the eye of a critic at the stuff the men are baking, as if we knew all about it, and help ourselves to fresh cakes and good things, just to try 'em, you know. The men don't care, because we're bakers. I've been in many a bake-shop and helped myself to all I wanted, when if they knew I was a moulder and not a baker they would kick me out. They don't generally want to hire a man just then, but when we do strike a job we work the boss for a small loan, if we can, and promise to be around the next morning ready for business. The next morning we are generally trying the dodge on some other bake-shop.—Cleveland Herald.

That Tired Feeling

When the weather grows warmer, that extreme tired feeling, want of appetite, dullness, languor, and lassitude, afflict almost the entire human family, and scrofula and other diseases caused by humors, manifest themselves with many. It is impossible to throw off this debility and expel humors from the blood without the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I could not sleep, and would get up in the morning with hardly life enough to get out of bed. I had no appetite, and my face would break out with pimples. I bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling, and my appetite improved." R. A. Sanford, Kent, O.

"I had been much troubled by general debility. Last spring Hood's Sarsaparilla proved just the thing needed. I derived an immense amount of benefit. I never felt better." H. F. Millet, Boston, Mass.

At no other season is the system so susceptible to the beneficial effects of a reliable tonic and invigorant. The impure state of the blood, the deranged digestion, and the weak condition of the body, caused by its long battle with the cold, wintry blasts, all call for the reviving, regulating and restoring influences so happily and effectively combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla did me a great deal of good. I had no particular disease, but was tired out from overwork, and it toned me up." Mrs. G. E. Simmons, Cohoes, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For seven years, spring and fall, I had scrofulous sores come out on my legs, and for two years was not free from them at all. I suffered very much. Last May I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla; and before I had taken two bottles, the sores healed and the humor left me." C. A. Arnold, Arnold, Me.

"There is no blood purifier equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla." E. S. Phelps, Rochester, N. Y.

ATKINS SOAP COMPANY.

TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

We appeal to the intelligence and good management required to save your strength and take this method to place in your hands an agent, which, with absolute safety to the fabric, will wash clothes with less work than any other in the world.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES WOMEN.
ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

OVER THE BORDER

Here and There among Men and Things in Ontario.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—Believing some facts connected with a recent tour through Canada would interest many of your readers from over the border, I venture the following items.

Leaving Windsor on the Detroit river, the Bosphorus of America, the boss for us as a river, you do catch it, do you? thanks Mr. Editor. Detroit papers please copy.—As we speed away east we are soon reminded of the fact that the old Great Western still sustained its reputation for speed, comfort and dispatch. London via Chatham was soon reached. Chatham is the Canaan of the colored folks in Canada. This lesser London, like the hoary old metropolis across the sea, stands in Middlesex (c). Not only the county name gave us a pleasant reminder, but other names in this little London. We went to Covent Garden, Piccadilly, Pall Mal, Black Friars. We saw St. Paul's Cathedral, and crossed more than once the river Thames—these very names identical with the old London names, so familiar to us when we ran her streets in the long ago. On the swift pinions of thought we were pleasantly transported to the busy, if not bright days of yore. The Londoners are justly proud of their pretty little city. A large audience went with the writer To and Fro in the larger London of the lecture, many in imagination, many in actual recollection of the great Labyrinth.

Ingersoll, noted for its brisk manufacturing enterprises. Woodstock for its fine Baptist college. Paris for its picturesque quietude are seen; and Dundas, beautiful for situation, is reached and a bit of delightful scenery attracts the traveler here. The town on the plain below, like Goldsmith's beautiful Auburn, loveliest village of the plain. Away on the distant ridge stands an ancestral village, while beyond Dundas, at the base of the mountain washed by a beautiful bay, stands the fine city of Hamilton with its 35,000 inhabitants. Many lofty factory shafts are towering above centres of industry among the lofty spires of her many churches. This is cheering, for it tells this pleasant fact: mingled with the sounds of prayer and praise is heard the inspiring melody of labor so calculated to cheer and enrich the hearts and homes of the masses.

We call Hamilton the Naples of Canada. As we view her in the distance, her bay shimmering brightly in the mellow glory of the sun, making this very scene, one of the finest landscapes between Omaha and the Genessee valley in N. Y. Hamilton, as its name indicates, is very Scotchy, that element largely predominating. The writer pleasantly remembers the luxury he enjoyed in 1883, when for twelve nights he was greeted by large audiences in a spacious tent, as he defined to the masses, the greatest social problem of the age: how by soberness they may be good to themselves.

It was in this city a few weeks ago we investigated a phase of religious crankism, namely, the street parade of a Salvation Army corps. They are quite strong here. Believing most heartily in the true and the beautiful, especially in Divine things, we stood aghast when the unseemly exhibition of irreverence took place on the line of march. The yelling shout might have been all right among the infatuists that followed Baal of old, but it seemed foreign to the reasonable age in which we live. Their clownish antics attracted the attention and awakened the disgust of the spectators. (This might apply to some local peculiarities perpetrated not a thousand miles from Tecumseh.) We asked ourselves serious questions that day viz: Is this apostolical? Would those earnest men of old thrum on drums, tingle tambourines, flaunt flags and clang cymbals? Did they guy and say funny things to raise a titter of laughter in the crowd? I called on that safe authority within me (my reason) and the satisfactory answer came in the negative, and as I turned away from this spectacular burlesque on the Sabbath day I felt thankful for the comfort my reason gave me.

Toronto, that fine city, is next noted. It is the best city by far in the Dominion, though not the largest. The pleasant thing about Toronto is the fact that the foreign elements represented there, from the old Lands of the rose, the shamrock and the thistle, are fairly and pretty equally balanced.

Fine buildings, massive brick blocks, brick colleges, churches, cathedrals, very popular hotels, make this city of nearly 100,000 inhabitants a very important center. There is some of the jostle, "helter-skelter drive and 'git thar'" activity of our own cities, giving one an inspiration to move around, that is eminently American. And yet Toronto at her best is quiet beside our busy Buffalo or bustling Boston.

The Canadians are very conservative in their make up. They love to imitate the very people they, at times most heartily denounce, I mean the Yankees. By the way, it matters but little or naught to them, whether the American is born in Maine or Mobile, they are Yankees just the same.

Canada is sorely afflicted by the "social scourge." Love of caste, aristocratic pretentions, the free and easy gait of the larger proportion of the American people is very distasteful to a large class there. This conservative element socially, always boasts of patrimonial importance on the ancestral line of the past, rather than rejoices in the development of the present, in social and intellectual accomplishment, such as a great Dominion and a greater Republic afford. The city of Toronto is the Gibraltar of a great wrong, and yet the good are marching around, marking the bulwarks of the rum power, and the fight was commenced in right earnest. The fight is carried on by the people. They are using righteously that effective weapon the liquor men fear—money—and soon the great Gibraltar will be turned, we trust, into a Waterloo of mighty victory. Canada need fear more from the reign and the ructions of the rum power at home than from Riel's rebellion in the northwest. Although we possess no predictive power, yet looking along the vista of coming days, we say the sovereign power of the people will eventually overturn this enemy of the race. The Kings among the people are many. Every man who votes is a crowned monarch. He wields a sceptre of influence. Coronated with political privilege where untraduced, and free he smites social wrongs, smites them with his votes. On this line of bombarding, the work will be accomplished. Their ammunition is good. Ballots are the BULLETS and the dark fabric of iniquity—the liquor traffic, in the low places among the people, and in the high places among the law makers.—must be shivered to ruins. Sovereigns rule: if not rightously at all times they are often very absolute. When Wolsey, the cardinal, offended his sovereign he was stripped of power and "Bluff King Hal" made him bemoan his fate as he said, "had I but served my God with the zeal I've served my King, &c. &c.

When Francis Bacon, the Ex-Lord Chancellor of England, perhaps the most brilliant of all England's bad men not excepting Lord Burleigh, when he Bacon, bartered away solemn trust for self aggrandizement, his reigning Sovereign consigned him to deserved obscurity. And this legalized monstrosity, made so by the civil law of erring men, repudiated though by the higher law of morality, sustained now by the legislative authority called license, is doomed by the higher authority of the people, and with Charles Mackay, the modern Burns of the Scottish people we say.

There is a fount about to stream,
There is a light about to beam,
There is a warmth about to glow,
There is a flower about to blow,
There is a midnight blackness changing into gray,
Men of thought and men of action, clear the way.

The people are waging a "Holy war" against this common foe of the most sacred of all institution on the face the earth, the Home, while the church, the school and the Ballot Box are endangered by this mighty power, but it will yet meet with its deserved fate at the hands of a righteously indignant people.

Aid it, hopes of honest men,
Aid it, paper, aid it type,
Aid it for the hour is ripe,
And our earnest must not slacken into play:
Men of thought, men of action, clear the way.

American Democracy has never proclaimed anything grander along the whole line of her illustrious history than this, the will of the people shall be the law of the land; that is safely politic. That is what the people of Canada are asking for and what they want we sadly need. This Home Ruling power—Local option—on the clean, clear line of absolute prohibition of this local disorder, the rum power. The fight is a persistent one in Canada and soon victories will be recorded from the murmurs of the Atlantic to the echoes of Niagara, from Winnipeg to Windsor. The work there is known as the Scott Act agitation and so great is its influence, so convincing are its telling majorities of the people's desire, that Sir John A. MacDonald, Canada's most illustrious statemen and premier, (himself a drinker) cheerfully yields to the mighty power of the peoples will, and openly avows he has voted for it himself and is perfectly willing to keep abreast of the people and let them reign. This agitation is carried on by all classes in church and state, those who can afford to be honest and who dare to be independent. Grit and tory in politics, church men and dissenters, Roman and Jew in religious enterprises, are in this righteous fray. Out of 73 contests at the polls, 62 victories are recorded. This causes the people to rejoice all over the land. One good Bishop of the church of England, has broken through Ecclesiastical conservativeness, and with exemplary earnestness is making old fashioned temperance addresses in and out of his diocese. Long live his lordship, the ideal Bishop of Huron—Dr. Baldwin. Surely Sir Walter Scott's words that open one of his exquisite poetic paragraphs are beautifully appropriate here.

Old Times are changed,
Old Manners gone.

Away we go, on the splendid new road, the Canadian Pacific Railroad. The coaches are as elegant as the N. Y. or Penn. Central. The officials politely obliging, we pleasantly miss the stiff stuck-upedness of its formidable rival. The old country moneyed monopoly, the Grand Trunk, with its boo boo here, and boo boo there, among its officials.

Peterboro, the finest city between Toronto and Ottawa, the Canadian capitol on the C. P. line is reached. It is noted for its fine residences and wealth. We were hospitably entertained at his worship's, the Mayor's mansion, one of the finest. Port Hope is a good solid town on Lake Ontario, a good maritime point. Coburg, with its Victoria university. Picton, named for the warrior bold whose deeds are remembered at Waterloo. Bellville, neat, natty and nice as a city. Naysance made a desperate resistance, but the people said, we want the Scott Act, and they triumphed.

Kingston the Limestone City, solid and massive. Queen's College and its fine institutions of learning and benevolence make it a pleasant place to visit. Not least among her structures is the Eastern penitentiary—a terror to evil doers.

Gananoque, the quaint old town, on the banks of the St. Lawrence river. The Indian of Gananoque is Rocks above the Water, very appropriate. Across the river here we shouted Land Ahoy! as we saw old York State, Jefferson Co. At this point the grand Thousand Island cluster is seen. These Islands, washed and fondled by the waters of the beautiful St. Lawrence river, are very popular as a resort for tourists.

In more than one town we were permitted to see the assembled battalions of Canadian volunteers, and as the buoyant brave impetuous young fellows marched away to the strains of martial music to the distant northwest to root out Riel's rebellion, the old thrill came back to the writer like that which moved him above thirty years ago, when as a nimble footed street boy, in Old London, he followed the stately stepping Red Coats of the line, or threw up his cap with a shout to dragoons, hussars and artillery-men, as they went away from applause and country to the land of the Czar to record their fame in the victories of Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman and Sebastopol.

Here and there we went in this fine country distinguished for its great agricultural resources, intellectual benefactions, public libraries, art schools, Chatauqua circles, lecture courses, and yet she is cursed beyond calculation by the whiskey fascination.

We might record, if time and space afforded, many interesting things of this great Dominion. It has a great future before it, and whether its annexation, to this greater America would be for the best interest of her people is for her statesmen and political enconomists of the future to determine. One thing we do know. Side by side in peaceful proximity to each other, these two great countries, can with propriety continue to emulate and inspire each other in all good works for the advancement of the highest interest of the people. Let America and Canada enter into the glorious contest and be speedy in the race. The result will be satisfactory, because social serenity, perenial peacefulness, happy homes, crowded churches, people thronging to art schools, reading rooms, lecture entertainments, will enoble the people and exhalt the natives.

The sublime teaching and splendid philosophy of total prohibition will bring this about. Men of thought, men of action, consider these things. Beat back the subtle seductive—the drink custom—which like the Ivy of my country, covers many a crumbling ruin. Shut up the saloons. Take whisky away from the man and a thousand times better work is done than trying to take man away from whisky, and fail. Oh, that this millenium of Soberness might come, and from the fisheries of Newfoundland to the Seals of Alaska, across Dominion and Republic, set the millions free by political prohibition. This would be no infringement of private liberty or public privilege, but a grand endowment of freedom. Men, women and children singing doxologies of delight from vale and mountain, from prairie and plain. Angels singing their joy songs over their heads because the people have been true to themselves, and ennobled and saved the greatest hemisphere under the stars.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian
HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause, the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

Petersburg Journal: On the farm of Wm. Smith, in south Riga, is a small marsh known as "Rattle snake" swamp, from the number of those reptiles found in its vicinity. It is so thickly covered with a rank growth of wild shrubbery that it has never been explored. During one of the hard wind storms of last week a tall sycamore tree, standing on the edge was blown into the swamp. Passing one day, Mr. Smith wished to see if he could draw the tree out, and walked along the trunk until he found the top resting on a rocky knoll which he found almost covered with the cast off skins off rattle snakes, and in every instance with the rattles attached. He secured several very fine skins, among which was one over seven feet in length evidently the former covering of a patriarch of the island. Mr. Smith filled his pockets with the rattles which lay around in great number. Some of them having from eight to twenty joints. It has always been supposed that the age of the snake could be determined by the number of its rattles, it taking on a new one each year. But it would appear from this to be a mistake, as they were, from the great number present, undoubtedly shed with the skin. Thus one by one the myths of our grandfathers' days are passing away.

The senior and junior polo teams played a match game Tuesday evening after skating hours. The seniors won two straight goals, thus coming off victorious. The juniors should practice a little.

A MASQUERADE SOCIAL.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—Last week I received a letter from my friend, Mrs. Rachel Osborn, inviting me to be present at a Congregational Social at her residence in Franklin, on Friday afternoon and evening the 24th. I readily accepted the invitation. On my arrival found quite a company from the afternoon social which was largely composed of old friends and neighbors, numbering about thirty-five.

The evening's entertainment was a Masquerade of ladies and gentlemen, numbering about fifteen, and they made it quite lively until it was announced that refreshments were ready when the maskers removed their masks. Now if Gumbo had been present, he would have said, this is ahead of all "quilting bees." Numbering over a hundred persons, friends from Tecumseh and Onsted were present. The old and young seemed to enjoy themselves in conversation, music, and magic writing. Concluding that mirth could not last forever, we bade our kind entertainers a lingering good night, and by a lovely moonlight we were soon speeding homeward.

The writer but echoes the wishes of the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Osborn, that their evening time may be very light, and that finally, when their life's sun shall set, it may be in a cloudless sky. Receipts for the evening $13,00. A GUEST.

Beer's Post, G. A. R. have secured Prof. F. H. Bailey to deliver one of his popular astronomical lectures for the benefit of the relief fund of the Post. The lecture will be illustrated with his mammoth cosmosphere, which is the largest portable globe in the world. The date fixed is Tuesday evening, May 12th.

Prof. Bailey is an Astronomer who is thoroughly in love with his subject, and able to present the story of the Starry Heavens in such a manner as to entertain while he instructs. There is a wealth of poetry in the old myths connected with the geography of the heavens, and Bailey brings it out in a way that makes the hours seem all too short.—Sterling Standard.

When in Homer stop at the Commercial House kept by H. Stone. It is one of the best hotels in Southern Michigan. Mr. Stone thoroughly understands the art of hotel-keeping, his tables are supplied with the best the market affords, his beds and rooms are A. 1. and his charges are reasonable. He runs a free bus to all trains. Remember the Commercial.

Adrian Record: It is said that during the present term of court a juryman, after gaining the jury room for deliberation on a verdict, inquired of his fellows which was the defendant. Now some folks are charging that this shows dullness on the part of the juror, but it don't. The opposing lawyers had traduced both parties to the case till nobody could tell with certainty which was the defendant.

We understand that Fred Curtis, of Addison, has been compelled to drive some of his stock to the Lake Shore road for shipment, by reason of the M. & O. company declining to provide proper conveniences at Addison for shipment. We think the report must have been exaggerated. In view of the work done by Mr. Curtis for the road at Addison, it is not reasonable to suppose that the M. & O. officials would refuse to grant him proper facilities for shipping his stock.

Be sure and attend the Japanese fair at the Presbyterian church parlors this evening. A fine collection of goods have been received from the curio department of the Formosa Tea Co., of Chicago. Fair opens at 7 o'clock, concert commences at 8 o'clock. Admission to fair and concert 10 cents.

Knapp's sextette band took advantage of the pleasant weather last Monday evening, and started out to give the citizens a sample of the music they are playing. After serenading several of the business houses, and smoking at the expense of the Lilley House, they halted in front of the Patterson house, and rendered some of their most persuasive music. Landlord Delano has an ear for music, and the boys were immediately invited into the dining room to refresh themselves, which they were not slow in doing, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

Fred Teachout, of Adrian, was in town last Sunday.

The Tecumseh Cornet Band were out serenading last Friday night.

The circus campaign has opened, but nary a circus has struck Tecumseh.

Clarence Hauck of Sunbury, Pa., has returned to Tecumseh and will stay during the summer.

A Blissfield barber has cut on prices. He scrapes a man for five cents, and will shear off a six months' growth of hair and hayseed for only ten cents.

P. W. Adams arrived in town yesterday noon in company with his mother. Mrs. Adams will remain here during the summer, but Waller will return to Delaware after a few days visit.

Mr. Lowden, of Adrian, is putting the finishing touches on a fine boat, to be called the City of Adrian, which will soon be launched on Devil's Lake. It is 25 feet in length, by 8 feet breadth of beam and is capable of carrying 25 persons.

B. L. Baxter came down from Battle Creek yesterday. He will spend about two weeks in Tecumseh and Deerfield looking up business matters before his return. He is well satisfied with the professional outlook at Battle Creek thus far.

Mont Hendershot, of Clinton, has accepted a position on the mechanical force of the News, and will be a permanent fixture of that office in the future. Joe Johnson who has been working there during the past year, starts for Muskegon, next week.

Our friends who have Probate printing to be done, will confer a favor upon us by requesting the Judge of Probate to insert their notices in the HERALD. The Judge will always comply with the wish of the parties interested in placing these notices.

Adrian Times: Those interested are warned to look out for a young man traveling about the state and claiming to represent the Whitman comedy company. He is said to make rates in the name of the company at the hotels, order a small amount of printing, run up a fair board bill and then get away between two days. He is represented to be a fraud.

Clinton Local: John Swift, a rough in the first sense of the phrase, after being from home for a long time, returned a few days since, and proceeded to go through the same old antics that had made him a despised man before his departure—beating his aged mother and throwing furniture, dishes, etc., around promiscuously. He was brought by officer Burroughs before Squire Brown, and was made to pay the penalty by 65 days in jail.

Jackson Patriot: C. C. Pond has a new horse, which is used in his lumber yard, and last evening, as the men were unhitching him, he was frightened by a locomotive whistle, and broke away and ran on the track and part way across the bridge, when he fell between the ties. A freight train came along and the pilot of the engine raised the horse and tipped him over into the river, from whence he came out on to Mechanic street, and was caught, unhurt, except a few bruises, received on the bridge.

The village teamster, John Messler, met with a serious accident last Friday afternoon which will lay him up for several weeks. While gathering rubbish near the Globe Mill the wagon upset and he was buried under the load. When extricated it was found that he had sustained a broken arm and leg. Dr. Woodward reduced the fracture and the patient is doing well. As he is a strong healthy man, the prospects are good for his recovery, but the injuries are serious and he will have to take good care of himself, and not attempt to work too soon.

Jackson Citizen: Cases are somewhat rare where dogs possess shrewdness to go to a doctor's office for surgical treatment, but August Heller owns one, a big black shepherd dog that got its foot cut with glass a few days ago. Mr. Heller took the dog to Dr. Wendt, who put on some linament and a bandage. Last night the dog returned and scratched at the doctor's door. It was opened and the wise canine hobbled in and held up his paw for the doctor to examine. The bandage was gone, but a new one took its place and the grateful animal expressed his thanks in dog language. He then trotted out and went directly home.

Adrian Record: Michael Fanning was yesterday feeling in good fighting trim and before that feeling wore off he visited the City hotel on North Main street and proceeded to set up a revival. He raised a quarrel with Landlord Wonder and a bloody encounter took place. When Under Sheriff Bowen arrived on the scene. Mike was covered with more gore than glory and Wonder also exhibited evidence of having lost considerable claret, a few teeth more or less being among the personal assets destroyed. Fanning was jailed by the officer and this morning before Justice Long was arraigned as a common tipler. After mature deliberation he said he was not guilty and went to jail till Friday for trial.

Adrian Record: Tecumseh's street commissioner is named Jordan, and the highways he is casting up give the lie utterly to the current impression that Jordan's is "a hard road to travel."

Lavern Wheeler has shown us some samples of a new style of photograph taken by the Cyanotype process. They are of a dark blue or red color, can be made very cheaply, and make a very handsome picture.

Prof. A. E. Haynes, of Hillsdale College, says of Prof. Bailey's globe: "The celestial globe invented by Prof. F. H. Bailey, is the most perfect piece of apparatus for illustrating some of the most interesting facts in astronomy which I have ever seen.

The Decoration committee had a meeting Tuesday evening and made some progress in perfecting arrangements for Decoration Day. The program is being arranged as rapidly as possible, and our citizens can rely upon having a good celebration.

The second annual report of the Bureau of labor is on our table. It is a book of 440 pages and contains a vast amount of labor statistics. The retiring Commissioner of Labor John W. McGrath has made a fine reputation for himself by the efficient manner in which he has performed the duties of that office.

Miss Frances Willard in the Chautauqua for May says: "After all, it does not so much signify what you may do, as that you do it well, whatever it may be, for the value of skilled labor is estimated on that democratic basis nowadays. President Elliot, of Harvard university, the cook of the Parker house restaurant and Mary L. Booth, of Harper's Bazaar, each receive $4,000 a year.

There was a good attendance at the Reform Club last Monday evening, and in addition to the usual business meeting a good program was presented, consisting of readings by Mrs. Gamble and Mr. Sholes, recitations by Mr. Brangan and Miss Emma Aten, and a song by Misses Ross and Ford. The club is negotiating with Rev. Mr. Ferris, who has been conducting the Free Methodist meetings during the winter, to give a temperance lecture at the opera house in the near future. Mr. Ferris is a good speaker and would draw a crowded house.

Adrian Times: The investigation of ex-Superintendent of Public Instruction Gass' methods of official business, last Tuesday, at Lansing, brought out the cost of the teachers' institute held in this city last August. Mr. Gass produced vouchers of expenditure of the office for August, 1884. Among them were those showing the expense of our institute to have aggregated $322.78. Among the items of expense were hack and railroad fares, hotel bills, traveling expenses, salaries of conductors and instructors, hall rentals, etc., altogether showing a heavy bill for one county.

Col. Sumner F. Spofford, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, departed this life last Monday morning, at the age of 77 years. The deceased was for many years a resident of Tecumseh at an early day, afterwards a resident of Adrian, and then he removed to DesMoines, Iowa, where he became a prominent citizen and lived for many years. A short service was held at his late residence at seven o'clock Tuesday morning and the remains were transferred to the morning train and taken to DesMoines for final burial. Mrs. Spofford, the widow of the deceased, and Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Wright accompanied them. An obituary notice is in preparation for a subsequent issue of the HERALD.

There is a man in our town, who is most wondrous wise, for when he marked his prices down, he then did advertise. And when he saw his trade increase, with all his might and main, he marked still lower every price and advertised again. And when he advertised again, his rivals stamped and tore, to see folks rush with might and main to patronize that store. And while they sat in solitude and saw his custom win, that man behind the counter stood and raked the shekels in. And when he raked the shekels in, and saw his fortune rising, he took a goodly lot of "tin" and kept on advertising. Each day a genuine sum he'd seek, and demonstrate full plain, the more one pays for printer's ink the greater is his gain.

Adrian Press: Does a republican want office? Oh no, we guess not. There's Mr. Caius Triplet, of Macon, who ran for school inspector against a lady, and the board when it finished counting declared the votes equal. Then there was a draw for the place, and the luck fell to Mrs. Howell. Mr. Triplet has notified the town clerk that he shall contest the ladies claim. Wonder if he will. Why trouble the clerk? Why not stuff his wallet, come to Adrian, see a lawyer, and proceed in the courts and have some fun? Want office? Oh no, not at all; Mr. Triplet don't care about the office. The trouble is that he hates to think he got licked by a lady. That's what "triangulates." By all means let him contest. Mrs. Howell possibly might be induced to give way to him, and ease his mind. Then possibly she "mightent."

Dr. M. M. Fessenden has moved his dental office from Dundee to Hudson, where he will be found in the future ready to pull teeth according to the most approved modern methods. Dr. Fessenden is an old Tecumseh boy, in whose success we feel interested. We commend him to the Hudson people as a gentleman and a good dentist.

Adrian Record; Talking about industry, here's one that takes the cake. A young barber in Clayton was just ready to take the afternoon train for Adrian last Saturday, when a couple of customers came in, and he went to work and shaved them and then walked to this city. The supposition is that he was coming to see his best girl and was bound to be here Sunday anyway.

Miss Sarah E. Rounds, the celebrated reader and elocutionist of Detroit, will appear at the Baptist Church, Friday evening, May 8th, in the interest of the S. S. Library fund. She is the finest reader ever heard in Tecumseh. Let all come and hear her. This is what the Detroit Evening News says of her entertainments:—The most pleasing feature of Madame Von Bremen's concert, at Whitney's Opera House, last evening, was the appearance of Miss Sarah E. Rounds. The young lady's voice is clear, resonant and powerful, and the manner in which she read Poe's "Bells" did great credit to her as a most accomplished professional.

Adrian Record: That which is constitutional in one case may be unconstitutional in another. The tax law of this state furnishes an illustration. In the upper peninsula Judge Grant sustained an action brought under the law. The case went to the supreme court and the judges were equally divided. In such a case the decision of the lower court stands. In Detroit, Judge Chambers, in a similar case, rendered a decision the opposite of that of Judge Grant. This case also went to the supreme court, which again was equally divided on the constitutionality of the law, therefore Chamber's also stands. So a thing may be constitutional in the upper peninsula and unconstitutional in Detroit. Twice two make four in the mining region, but two times two in the lower peninsula don't. Constitutions are wonderful things.

Business is dull in the wood market.

Miss Cora Abbott, of Adrian, is now at Dr. Jones' residence, and will give instructions in crayon or will make crayon pictures to order.

E. C. Smith and wife, of Chicago, arrived in town last Friday and remained in town over Sunday, enjoying a brief visit with their Tecumseh acquaintances.

This is the way the Addison Courier man reports religious meetings:

We could not attend the conference on account of pressing business, but would have been willing to publish a full account of the meeting, if any of the congregational friends had seen fit to furnish the same. We print all such things that come to us for publication.

Mr. Robert Cairns has been enduring the process of housecleaning this spring to some purpose. While the carpets were up, he has availed himself of the chance to paper over all the rooms. Nearly every room in the house has been ornamented with wall and ceiling decorations, of a most elaborate and elegant character. The paper was procured at Wright's and Friend McNiel did the work. Mr. and Mrs. Cairns, as soon as they get "settled" again, will have a beautiful home.

A newspaper has a right to criticise in an honest manner anything that is of public nature. Following is the law laid down by the Chief Justice in his charge to a jury in a libel suit: "A public newspaper has a right to comment upon and criticise in the discharge of public duties. If the publishers discover what they consider to be defects, they have a right to point them out. If there are facts which suggest fault, the public press has a right to criticise and to censure. If in the exercise of this freedom of comment they act fairly and right, they cannot be held accountable. It is of great importance to the public that newspapers should have this liberty. If there should be none to censure or criticise, frauds would grow more intolerable, to the manifest peril of the public welfare, and therefore, you can see that the public have a great interest in maintaining unshackled the right of the public press to freely criticise."

Several railroad ties placed on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad rails, near Twenty-fourth street, this morning, threw off the track the passenger train that left the Brush street depot at 7:38. No injury was done except to the locomotive. The train was delayed over an hour. About the same time obstructions were placed on the track of the Bay City road, which runs alongside the L. S. & M. S. at this spot but they were discovered and removed before any train passed. Railroad officials are investigating the matter, and trying to find the parties who attempted to do some train wrecking in broad daylight. The section gang who passed up the road about seven o'clock this morning, on a hand car, found everything clear. The flagman at the Michigan avenue crossing says a gang of men passed up the road shortly after seven o'clock, but as the place where the ties were thrown on the track is nearly half a mile beyond he could not say that they were the guilty parties.—Evening News, 24.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name first given to this terrible disease by those who witnessed its fearful ravages upon the human family. The disease was so called because it was thought only a King or Queen could cure it. Modern science has proved that the blood is the source of all diseases of this character, and that the best blood purifier is the best remedy for the King's Evil.

SCROFULA

can only be cured by a thorough purifier of the blood. If this be done, the disease will disappear, and health will follow. At this season of the year, when the blood is impure and sluggish, it is the duty of every man, woman and child to take a good blood purifier, such as Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. It is well to add that Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and many other dangerous or fatal maladies are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It has effected as astonishing cures as it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the diseased forms of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it invigorates and vitalizes the blood, restoring health and vigor to the whole system and rejuvenating the entire system. The great

Regenerative Medicine

It is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, Iodide of Potassium, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Performing a mission unknown to the medical profession and public, as the only reliable Alterative or Blood Purifier in an

Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiated state of the blood. It is concentrated, and the most powerful blood purifier that the skill of the chemist can produce. It is the only preparation for which it can be truthfully claimed to be a specific, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine in the world.

JUSTICE IN RUSSIA.

Collisions Between Juries and the Imperial Authorities—Peasant Courts.

Twenty years ago the Czar Reformer substituted trial by jury for the system of Crown Judges. It is the general opinion here that, next to the abolition of serfdom, the introduction of trial by jury has served for the moral elevation of the people far more than any other reform. The jury system, however, has not been introduced in all the provinces of European Russia. Apart of the Caucasus and all of Siberia and Central Asia are still under the jurisdiction of the Crown Judges. Justice by the Crown Judges is usually called trial by Judge Shemjaka. Instead of listening to the testimony that worthy judge used to keep his eye on the caps of the plaintiff and defendant, in which was kept tangible and unbiased evidence in the shape of rights and silver caps. The balance of justice inclined in favor of him whose cap contained the larger bundle. After cap evidence can not be conveniently presented before the judge, the Crown Judges to this day hold court behind closed doors. And yet to represent Russia as Mr. Katkoff of the Moscow Gazette, included, who gave perhaps to the Crown Judges. In fact, to the Russian it must be said that the jury system came into vogue at the same time with the autocratic regime. The Czar, being the sole legislator, issues his laws regardless of the views of his people. The jurors, the people's representatives, are called upon to pass a verdict according to their own convictions. But the trouble is that there are many things which, though forbidden by the imperial law, are justified by popular opinion. Hence come collisions between the Russian jury and the imperial authorities.

In a village stricken with famine the imperial tax collectors undertook to empty the village granary and drive away the domestic animals. Starvation stared the villagers in the face, and a peasant shouted to them:

"Brothers! Let us take sticks and drive away the tax collectors, who have come to rob us of our last crust of bread. The treasury may safely wait for our taxes, and at any rate the Czar would not starve us. To the sticks!"

And to the sticks they betook themselves, and drove off the tax collectors. But the next day a regiment of soldiers came to the village, and the leader of the riot was put in chains and carried away. On the trial the Crown Attorney demanded that, according to the law, the defendant should be sent to the Siberian mines for twenty years. But the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. The acquitted peasant, however, was kidnaped by gendarmes and disappeared forever.

This is one of a thousand cases of collision between juries and the imperial authorities. It seems to me that the jury system, though far from being what it ought to be in the interests of justice, is one of the most powerful factors which are undermining the autocracy.

There are some special courts here, such as the Merchants' Court, the Craftsmen's Court, the Church Court, the Military Courts, the Land Surveying Courts, and others, in which specific offenses are tried.

But there are many subjects of the Czar who quite ignore his law. Over fifty millions of peasants dispose of all their civil suits in their own way, by their own courts. If a peasant is caught stealing, if he drinks too much or beats his wife for no cause, if he indulges in idling while taxes are unpaid, if he does not pay his debts, if he offends a priest or somebody else—in all such and like cases the village is set as a court of justice. Their verdicts are sweeping, ugly, plain and sensible. In all cases where land questions of property are involved, the party is to mend to make good the damage or loss. In the case of some personal offense, they usually resort to the birch, and pound the culprit, as they call the whipping with rods. The verdicts of the village courts are cheerfully obeyed, for the villagers have the power not only to expel obnoxious members from the village, but even to send them to Siberia.

Among the mountain tribes of Caucasus, if a murderer does not pay the blood fine he is sure to pay with his life for the relatives of the victim. Then it is their sacred duty to take a bloody revenge. If he undertakes to pay the fine the murderer takes the precaution he can purchase and load it with such goods as cloth, arms, clothes and money. Then placing a rope on his own neck he leads the horse to the family of his victim. If the mother or wife of the dead man takes off the rope from the neck of the murderer he lives. Having surrendered the blood money and other presents, he returns home. If, however, nobody takes the rope from his neck, that means that he is under the penalty of death, unless he can appease the wrath of the family by costlier presents.

In Turkestan, according to the Koran, instead of justice, a murderer may expiate his crime by paying a blood fine, which consists of a number of camels, sheep and goats. In some cases, however, the family of the victim refuse to accept any presents and then a judicial duel is arranged. The murderer, armed to the teeth, appears on his best horse. Two or three male relatives of the victim, also armed and on horseback, meet their foe. Then begins a wild and awful scene. The murderer tries to escape, or at least to meet his foes separately in combat. If the murderer remains alive until sunset he is safe, but that rarely happens, and sometimes one of the avengers loses his life, too.

Some of the Mohammedans living in Russia, in case of murder, resort to what they call God's judgment. The nearest and strongest of the relatives of the victim, with dagger in hand, meets the murderer. If he kills his man the avenger exclaims: "Now my soul shall have peace," and there the matter ends. If, however, the murderer proves the best man, he is to meet still another avenger.

The Czar reigns, but does not rule all of his subjects.—St. Petersburg Cor. N. Y. Sun.

AMERICAN AUDIENCES.

Impartiality Their Dominant Characteristic, According to Mr. Irving.

The dominant characteristic of the American audience seems to be impartiality. They do not sit in judgment, resenting as positive offenses lack of power to convey meanings or divergence of interpretation of particular character or [illegible]. I understand that when they do not like a performance they simply go away, so that at the close of the evening the silence of a deserted house gives to the manager a verdict more potent than applause and imprecation. This does not apply to questions of morals which can be and are as quickly judged here as elsewhere. On this subject I give entirely the verdict of others, for it has been my good fortune to see our audiences seated till the final falling of the curtain. Again, there is a kindly feeling on the part of the audience toward the actor as an individual, especially if he be not a complete stranger, which is, I presume, a part of that recognition of individuality which is so striking a characteristic in American life and customs. Many an actor draws habitually a portion of his audience, not in consequence of great merit, not from capacity to arouse violent emotion, but simply because there is something in his personality which they like. This point forcibly reminds me of the story told of the manager of one of the old "rents," who gave as a reason for the continued engagement of an impossibly bad actor that "she was good to his mother." The thorough enjoyment of the audience is another point to be noticed. Not only are they quick to understand and appreciate, but there seems to be a genuine pleasure in the expression of approval. American audiences are not surpassed in quickness and completeness of comprehension by any that I have yet seen, and no actor need fear to make his strongest or his most subtle effort, for such is sure to receive instant and full acknowledgment at their hands. There is little more than this to say of the American audience. But, short though the record is, the impression upon the player himself is profound and abiding. To describe what one sees and hears over the footlights is infinitely easier than to convey an idea of the mental disposition and feeling of the spectators. The house is ample and comfortable, and the audience is well-disposed to be pleased. Ladies and gentlemen alike are mostly in morning dress, distinguished in appearance, and guided in every respect by a refined decorum. The sight is generally picturesque. Even in winter flowers abound, and the majority of the ladies have bouquets either carried in the hand or fastened on the shoulder or corsage. At matinee performances especially, where the larger proportion of the audience is composed of ladies, the effect is not less pleasing to the olfactory senses than to the eye. Courteous, patient, enthusiastic, the American audience is worthy of any effort which the actor can make on its behalf, and he who has had experience of them would be an untrustworthy chronicler if he failed, or even hesitated, to bear witness to their intelligence, their taste, and their generosity.—Henry Irving, in Fortnightly Review.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask that those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience and it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

WHITE SEAL BURNING OIL!

The New York Board of Health estimates that 20,000 lives have been destroyed by the explosive qualities of petroleum. If every household would adopt the White Seal Oil for family use, none of these unfortunate accidents would occur.

WHITE SEAL BURNING OIL

Has none of the defects usually found in common oils. It cannot be explosive, does not char the wick, will not smoke, emits no offensive odor and prevents the blackening of chimneys.

WHITE SEAL BURNING OIL

Is a gem of a Illuminating Oil. It is as light in color as pure spring water. It gives a strong steady light and burns much longer than common oils.

If this oil is not sold in your vicinity, send your order direct to us for a barrel or a case containing two five gallon cans.

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

—The Tichborne claimant is exhibiting himself to small audiences in England to earn a living.

—Of the 217 members who in 1821 formed the Paris Geological Society said to be the oldest organization of its kind only one is now living.

—While elephant hunting recently in the Garrow Hills, in Bengal, Lords Arthur and Henry Grosvenor captured eighty-five elephants in three drives.

—It has always been the belief of Mrs. Burton, wife of the well-known traveler, that since England took the Koh-i-noor diamond, proverbial for the bad luck it brings, nothing but disaster has attended all concerning British India.

—A fatal duel, arising from a most trivial cause, is reported from Cologne, where two officers met recently, and, after the exchange of seventeen shots, one of them was mortally wounded, expiring within an hour. The cause of the duel was that one of them put on the other's cap.

—A young Englishman has had his left leg specially exempted from the insurance granted him by several companies, whose losses through the sudden weakness of that limb had led them to be wary in the matter. Hence clauses in his policy provide that he can not recover unless proof is made that his injuries shall not have been caused by the faulty member.

—The Lancet says that appetite is a most misleading sensation, only remotely related to the actual demands of the organism. If we only ate more deliberately we should find half our accustomed quantity of food sufficient to satisfy the most eager cravings of hunger, and hence save ourselves from the evil of dyspepsia, or, on the other hand, a tendency to over increase in weight.

—Timber rafts on the Rhine are a notable characteristic of that historic river. A single raft has often eight or ten small houses on it, and from 100 to 500 workmen, rowers and pilots. The vast pile is steered by means of immense oars, and is so constructed as to twist like a huge snake in the narrow channels. The sale of a raft at the end of the voyage often realizes about $150,000.

—Porto Rican ladies, although as dark as mulattos, carry with them to all public places a face powder made from grinding a peculiar shell, and when they think no one is looking their way they give their faces fresh coats of it. Of course the powder shows, but good breeding makes the observer technically blind to the ludicrous combination of black nature and white pulverized shell.

—The increase of the criminal class in England has by no means kept pace with that of the general population. In the fifteen years from 1869 to 1874 the population of England and Wales is augmented by nearly 5,000,000 souls, but the prison population had actually fallen by more than 1,500. If England had gone on producing criminals at the rate at which she was turning them out in 1869, she would have had a prison population in 1884 of something like 14,000, instead of one below 10,000.

—The public baths of Vienna are said to be the finest in the world. The building itself, says the English Mechanic, is situated in the heart of the city, and incloses a basin 156 feet in width by 578 feet in length, and varying in depth to twelve feet. The enormous quantity of water contained in this basin is renewed three times a day. The whole establishment has accommodation for 1,500 persons, and is open from May 1st to October 31st, and from five in the morning until dusk. There is also a bath, restricted to ladies, open from nine in the morning until one, and the Vienna ladies are especially good swimmers.

THERMAL LEVELS.

How Discrepancies in Thermometer Marks May Be Explained.

The general fact that the temperature of the air varies with different levels above the earth's surface has long been recognized. Meteorologists tell us that there is usually a fall of one degree Fahr. for every 300 feet of a cent above the sea level, with certain variations for local causes. We may call this a meteorological thermal fluctuation, and it is always marked by a fall of temperature with increased elevation. But there is an equally important change of temperature in the opposite direction, of great importance to the farmer and fruit-grower, namely, a loss of temperature as we descend into valleys. In early years I was a country doctor, and had to take many a long ride in the night. The road passed from a high bluff into a deep valley, with another bluff on the opposite side. When the air was still I could detect by the change of temperature the transition from the warm air of the bluffs to the chilly air of the valley. It was like passing into a cold stream of water, and the change was equally abrupt on passing into the warm air on the opposite bluff.

I appreciate the fact that one's feelings can hardly be accepted as a reliable test of temperature, and that a thermometer is better than a sensation to furnish reliable physical data. "The temperature of the open air" for any given locality, and for the same time, is supposed by most persons to be a definite and uniform quantity. If two persons in the same neighborhood report different temperatures for the same hour, it is supposed that such difference must arise from a difference in the correctness of the thermometers, or some accidental variation of exposure, it being assumed that the "temperature of the open air" for a given locality and identical time would be the same. Many persons suppose it is a very simple thing to determine the temperature of the open air; it is only necessary to hang the thermometer outdoors till it has reached a point of no fluctuation and then read off the temperature by the thermometer scale. But when trial is made even with thermometers that compare favorably with each other under identical conditions, a marked discrepancy is often observed in places of near neighborhood.

This is especially true if the thermometers are at different levels and there is no wind. We treat of air under the head of pneumatics, whereas it sometimes comes rather under the head of hydraulics, for cold air flows in currents the same as fluids. In the absence of wind which mixes up the strata of air of different temperatures, and consequently of different specific gravity, the cold air of the night will flow in streams and gather in ponds or lakes the same as water. Under such circumstances the temperature will vary with the level, and the subject of thermal levels becomes a matter of importance. I have made many observations to determine the difference of temperature with slight differences of elevation. An open air thermometer hangs at the north door of my laboratory, adjusted to avoid accidental variations of temperature. A ravine runs through the college lawn near the laboratory. A thermometer was placed in the ravine 150 feet from the one by the laboratory door and twenty-five feet below its level. In very cold weather, when the air was very still, I have occasionally seen the thermometer in the ravine mark eight degrees below the thermometer at laboratory door.

During the cold weather of last month I again examined the relative temperature at these two points, selecting mornings with little wind for such observations and reached the following results:

February 21, at 6:45 a. m., laboratory....—15°
February 22, at 6:45 a. m., ravine.....—20°
February 23, at 5:45 a. m., laboratory....—5°
February 23, at 6:30 a. m., ravine.....—20°

A slight breeze with velocity of two miles an hour was blowing on both mornings. The lowest temperature on the preceding nights at my meteorological station (about forty rods distant and on higher ground than the laboratory) was 14 deg.

February 24, at 6:30 a. m., ravine.....—4°

I then carried the thermometer from the ravine and hung it by the side of the one at the laboratory, and they soon marked the same temperature—1 deg. I carried the thermometer ("Green's Standard") back to the ravine and placed it about two feet lower, and in the narrow channel of the ravine, and it soon reached 5 deg. The minimum temperature at my station for the night was 4 deg.

These investigations show that thermal levels, or marked changes of temperature with slight differences of elevation, are facts of great importance to the farmer and fruit-grower where the difference of a few degrees of temperature makes the difference between success and failure. A very intelligent fruit-grower in the Traverse region had on his farm a long narrow valley of sandy soil which descended somewhat rapidly into another deeper valley below; about half way down this upper valley was a bank or dam of sand cutting across the valley like a mill-dam across a stream. The soil being a warm quick sand was cultivated, and good crops secured save in the air pond above the dam. No frost troubled the crops in other parts of the valley. Tiring of this dam and weary of the frosts he removed the dam and opened up the valley for its full length. He had no more frosts in his former frost pond, the aerial torrent now left its frost marks in the lower part of the valley, where the crops had never been troubled before the dam was removed. Aerial drainage is a subject that will demand more attention in the future.—Dr. Kedzie, in N. Y. Tribune.

GAS TAR.

Its Value as a Preservative From Attacks of Epidemic Diseases.

The serious outbreak of cholera with which France has recently been visited has caused inquiry to be made as to the extent to which persons engaged in particular manufacturing operations enjoy immunity from or are rendered more susceptible to the attacks of epidemic disease. It has been known almost ever since the establishment of gasworks that the exhalations arising in the various processes of gas manufacture—although, perhaps, not specially pleasing to the olfactory organs—are not detrimental to health, but, on the contrary, highly beneficial in special forms of diseases, such as whooping cough and croup. The extensive use, in throat ailments, of preparations in which some form of carbolic acid figures largely is a testimony to the value of this derivative of coal tar as a therapeutic agent. A recent issue of the Journal des Usines a Gaz contains an article in which particulars are given respecting certain investigations made by Dr. Lemaire some years ago into the subject of the influence of coal tar and its derivatives upon the health of the workmen employed in the preparation of these substances. His inquiries were made chiefly in connection with the employes of the Paris Gas Company. He found that those whose duties did not necessitate a prolonged stay in the parts of the works where tar was to be found were liable to all kinds of ailments, and formed a considerable proportion of the number on the sick list; while among the workmen specially occupied with tar, only three were sick in the course of seven years. This result is all the more striking when the number of workmen in the service of the company at the period referred to is considered. There were altogether 20,553 men, of whom 164 were engaged in some occupation connected with tar. Dr. Lemaire also cites the case of the Bayonne gasworks, where the workmen had not only not been attacked by cholera during its prevalence, but generally enjoyed immunity from skin diseases. M. Bouley, a professor at the veterinary school at Alfort, found as long ago as 1860 that gasworks employes escaped during cholera epidemics, and the communication of this fact to Dr. Lemaire, caused him to institute his inquiries into the subject.—London Iron.

A SURPRISING CHANGE.

With its broad streets and majestic avenues adorned with stately buildings, Detroit is one of the most magnificent cities on this continent. Its new system of electric lighting throws into obscurity all the old methods, and leaves ordinary street lamps where dingy tallow dips used to be. The new lights are on light lattice work towers, 125 to 150 feet high, shedding a radiance which is like intensified moonlight. The effect of this when the city is covered with its white robe of snow, is strangely beautiful.

A gentleman recently spent a day or two in Detroit, pushing his researches to some extent in the direction of finding out as to the new method of curing rheumatism by means of Athlophoros, the remedy which in the last year or two has attained such favor as a victor over this old enemy of the human race. Calling on Mr. E. B. Watson, the well-known superintendent of the American District Telegraph Company, he found that gentleman cheerfully ready to say all the pleasant things he could about Athlophoros.

"My wife," said Mr. Watson, "was suffering terribly from rheumatism; her pains were both in joints and muscles. So excruciating were her agonies when she moved, that sometimes on assuming one position in the morning she would remain in that position all day rather than endure the torment of being moved. I procured a bottle of Athlophoros, and the effect on my wife was as surprising as it was gratifying. We had no idea that any medicine could so speedily remove such an obstinate disease. She was soon cured, and the cure was complete. Since that she has had no return of the disorder. We speak freely among our friends of the good work of Athlophoros, and have no hesitation in saying how highly we esteem it."

Visiting nearly all the leading drug stores in the city, it was found that all who had kept Athlophoros had received from their customers marked commendation of its efficacy. One lady had taken six bottles of it with the result of a complete cure. At Frizelle's, on Michigan Avenue, one of the clerks had taken it with excellent effect. This young man, Mr. Cohen, had suffered greatly with rheumatism. Though surrounded by medicines of every description, they did not reach his case. Mr. Cohen tried Athlophoros, and found that it did for him what nothing else had been able to do.

From Detroit to Chicago is but a day's ride, and in the latter city Athlophoros has also accomplished some wonderful results.

In Chicago, at 905 West Twelfth street, lives, Mr. William W. Summers, of the well-known firm of Summers, Morrison & Co., commission merchants, 174 South Water street. Mr. and Mrs. Summers gave substantially the following facts:

"When Robbie was taken sick some weeks ago we thought at first that it was only an ordinary cold, but it proved to be something much more severe. The pains were evidently those of rheumatism. We wrapped the boy in cotton and gave him a number of the remedies such as are generally given. His agony was dreadful. We had to hold him in the bed, his agony was so great. We had two physicians, who did not succeed in making him any better. The poor child's torture was so intense that he asked for a pistol, so that he might put himself out of the way and thus end his sufferings. When he was at his worst we thought of Katie Gill, who was well known to us, and the medicine that had cured her. We sent to Mr. Gill's to know the name of the medicine and where to get it. They happened to have some left in a bottle—Athlophoros the name is—and they kindly sent it to us. It is surely a very strange and powerful medicine, for it stopped the boy's pain very soon and very effectually. He took but a little of it, for there was only enough for about three doses in the bottle Mr. Gill sent us. This was only a few weeks ago. The boy has had no return of rheumatism. You see him now as hearty and as happy as any other boy."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS CO., 112 Wall Street, New York.

The publisher of the Madison County Record writes from Huntsville, Ark., as to the effect of Brown's Iron Bitters on his wife. Mr. Daugherty says, "My wife has been using the Bitters for some months; the effect in her case is remarkable." Medical Value of Wines.

As a general rule the use of wine is not necessary for young or adult persons in good health, breathing country air and not exposed to ovarwork. As however life advances and the circulation becomes languid, natural red wine used in moderation, becomes an essential article and in many cases absolutely necessary but it must be the pure product of the grape. And even in the Eastern States the physician meets large numbers of town people, especially women, who cannot digest the food and drinks suited to out-door laboring people. In such cases they resort to the beverage of tea, which gives rise to a distressing dyspepsia. The Wines produced in New Jersey, especially the Burgundy and the Port Grape Wines from Alfred Speer's Vineyards, at Passaic, N. J., are the more reliable and most sought after by those who travelled and know what wines are.

OBITUARIES

The father of the deceased, Pulaski King came to Tecumseh in the year [illegible] in company with Musgrove Evans, Sheriff Patchin and others and assisted in building the first habitation a brush house near the present site of Hawks' mill in Brownville. In 1827 Mr. King bought of the Government and located at what is now known as the H. W. Manspeaker farm west of the village, and [illegible] to Onondaga Co. N. Y. for a family and was taken sick and died. The old part of the sketch was [illegible] in Tecumseh and received an excellent education for those days at the Rev. Seth Cochran's in Auburn, College Hill, which was her guide through a [illegible] Christian life. She also [illegible] Chas. Spafford in 1830 and [illegible] with George [illegible] where she lived her [illegible] and late single-hood. For [illegible] years she has made time [illegible] her home. She boarded a few [illegible] at Greek Pattern, and [illegible] the struggle for a home [illegible] the same premises. Her life [illegible] in the county in the [illegible] and since that time she has [illegible] a home with her children and [illegible] Lord. She was always delicate in [illegible] organization and [illegible] years previous to her death was practically blind, an affliction which she bore with Christian resignation. She was a woman of lovely spirit and of more than ordinary attainments. [illegible] two sisters, [illegible] the sisters, [illegible] the church in Onondaga Valley N. Y. of which Dr. Lansing was the pastor. She was warmly attached to the Presbyterian church of Tecumseh of which she was a loving member, and in the confinement of her latter years her prayers were constant for its welfare. Though seldom seen except by friends who appreciated her worth, she will be greatly missed and will leave behind her a pleasant memory. Her wish was to be removed from her afflictions and pass the portals of Home in sweet sleep. This wish has been gratified. She leaveth his beloved companion, George Spafford of Tecumseh, and Charles Spafford of Brooklyn, two children who survive the sainted mother. Her two sons, Pulaski and Fred King of Lafayette had died in her native Mississippi. Extensive floral tributes which were sent at the funeral time which occurred at her old homestead in Auburn on Wednesday the 22d. A few pioneers who are still left among us and many of the younger people who enjoyed a personal acquaintance with grandma Spafford, will cherish her memory with reverence and drop a tear with the mourners over her grave. In her domestic relations, as wife, mother, and grandmother she exemplified the traits of a life of self sacrifice and devotion which endeared her to all. At a ripe age she passes from her reward in the affectionate love of family and friends to her higher reward in Heaven. She placed her burden by the wayside for a pillow and laid down to sleep.

"Just as I am—I Come."

On the morning of the 24th inst., at 4 P.M. we were called upon to realize that Mrs. Chas. K. Spafford, who had often sung the words at the head of this article, had really gone—not to call upon some friends of this world—but to mingle with the kind mother who had entered into rest but the short space of three days previous, and many others who had preceded them, to reap their reward.

She was born in Rome township, Lenawee Co., Dec. 12th, 1841, and when but three years old removed with her parents to Raisin, and lived upon the farm known as the Isaac Adams farm, one mile south of Tecumseh, for several years. From thence they moved to the village, and in 1858 she was married to Chas. K. Spafford. They continued to abide in Tecumseh until January 1882, when they removed to Clinton, in which place they have made their home since. Although she was not a communicant of the church, she was an earnest advocate of Christian life and principles, and often grieved that infirmity beyond her control debarred her from the enjoyment attendant upon Christian worship in the house of the Lord.

Her parents were Episcopalians, and she had expressed a desire that the last sad rites be solemnized at that church, which desire was granted, and a large congregation assembled at St. Peters church, Tecumseh, Sabbath day, April 26th, to pay their last tribute to the departed.

During her many years residence in Tecumseh, she had gathered about her the warmest friends. Unassuming in disposition, faithful to husband and children, nuttring in her domestic duties, she filled to the fullest measure the ideal of wife and mother, and endeared herself to all. Her old Tecumseh acquaintances will learn of her demise with the deepest sorrow, and their hearts will beat in sympathy with the stricken family in this hour of their affliction.

Although her home in Clinton had been of short duration, and she had spent much of that time in her own house, many of the citizens had seen her, and but to love and respect her, as was nobly attested through all her trials and suffering, no wish escaping her lips, but was gratified by willing hands prompted by loving hearts, and many sympathized deeply with those who were left to mourn her absence. On many occasions has the power of the arm of flesh been, as in this case, thoroughly tested, and the result the same—the sufferer went on to suffer, till God in his wise Providence most graciously interposed for their deliverance, and they live in a home not made with hands.

Can we forget that Mother's smile of love,
That with angel fondness glows,
Like some stray sunbeam from above,
Upon a budding rose?

The smiles of earth, unto the eye,
Though sweet—can scarce compare,
With those lovely smiles from the sky,
Which tell us, God is there.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHAFFER.

Mrs. Hattie Johnson and daughter visited Tecumseh friends last week.

Mrs. George Kies and Mrs. Chas. Cummins drove up here from Tecumseh last Sunday.

John Hause has been building a new fence around his lot on Tecumseh street, making a great improvement thereby.

Miss Ella Swift commenced her first term of school last Monday, in the Monaghan district, ten miles west of here.

The opening of Bush and Swift's grocery and meat market was held last Saturday. Many improvements have been lately made on the building and the goods have been arranged in a very neat and attractive manner. Business seems lively with them on the start. We sincerely hope that they will be able to draw a good trade and we know they will not fail to please their customers.

The Sunday School class of Mrs. John T. Clark, will give an entertainment Saturday evening May 9th, at the Town Hall, for the benefit of the Congregational Sunday school. The program will consist of music, shadow pantomimes, scenes from Pickwick papers, etc. Admission 10 cents.

Mr. George Williams met with quite an accident last week while kalsomining at Mrs. Nimock's. He was standing on a step ladder and suddenly growing faint he was unable to keep his balance and fell to the floor, striking on his side, and injuring himself quite severely. He had not been well for several days and attributed the faintness to that. He is now able to work.

Ben Ellis talks of taking a trip to Kansas City Mo. about the middle of this month. We wish him a pleasant journey, but hope the charms of the west will not be so great as to induce him to leave Clinton permanently.

Mr. and Mrs. Dow Draper who have been living at Mt. Pleasant, have decided to make Clinton their home. Mr. Draper sold his meat market at the former place about two weeks ago. They will live at Jacob Smith's of whose farm Mr. Draper is to have the management.

Mrs. Lena Weber, of Chelsea, Mich. came here last Sunday to attend her sister's funeral.

Michael Gillen's year old baby came very near dying last week, from having a button hook caught in its throat. It was hooked in one of the tonsils and was there about ten minutes before it could be taken out. Beyond a pretty sore throat for the child and a terrible fright for the parents, the consequences of the accident were not as serious as might have been expected.

John McAdam has been quite sick for a few days. He has decided that being so closely confined in the store was injuring his health; in accordance with which he has left the employ of John Smith & Son and has entered into partnership with Will Muir in the meat business. The new firm commenced operations at E. F. Muir's old stand, last Monday morning. Success to the boys.

The horse race indulged in last Saturday on Tecumseh street, though doubtless highly entertaining to the drivers and lookers-on, was dangerous in the extreme. The participants in their excitment seemed to forget that they were on the main thoroughfare, as it were, and they were in a position not to realize how their sport might end. If they were willing to risk their own lives, other people might not be so anxious to imperil themselves and we feel sure that they would confer a favor upon many, to confine their racing to some less frequented street.

Mrs. Charles Rupp died at her home last Saturday night, after an illness of two weeks. Her death was very sudden, and until a few hours before she died, unexpected. She had seemed to be gaining and on the fair road to recovery, when she was taken worse and in a few hours was a corpse. She leaves a husband and two children, one two years, and the other two weeks old. She had many friends who will deeply mourn her loss. The funeral services were held at St. Dominic's church last Tuesday morning.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

April showers are somewhat late.

The late rains make the wheat and grass look green.

The masons commenced work on Mrs. Hall's house, Monday.

Agent A. J. Sutton went to Pulaski Saturday, to see his friend Frank Butler.

Misses Ella Jackson and Ida Arner, spent Saturday at Adrian.

G. W. Hill shipped a carload of staves last Thursday, to Albany N. Y.

A. W. Slayton, of Tecumseh, shipped a car of baled hay from here Monday.

Chas. Sutton and Chas. Smith have been very sick for the past few days, but are reported on the gain, by the attending physician, R. H. Nelson.

Mrs. Jeff Kennedy, of Raisin, and Mrs. Mary Kennedy, of Tecumseh, visited Mrs. W. H. Arner last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Palmer, of Hillsdale, were with relatives from Saturday until Monday.

Martin Palmer who is attending school at the Hillsdale college was home over Sunday calling on relatives and friends. College life seems to agree with him, as he looks hearty.

Mr. Will Clack will teach the spring term of two months in the Easlick Dist. The school commenced Monday last.

Frank Allen, Agent at Jerome spent Sunday with his uncle and family, Mr. Wesley Pennington, of Macon.

The Ladies church social will be held at the home of the Pres., Mrs. D. W. Loree, next week Friday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all. If you wish to have a pleasant time come out.

Agent Frank Allen, of Jerome, made his folks and friends a call from Friday night until Wednesday. On Saturday night a few of the young folks made him a little surprise and spent the evening very pleasantly.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Loree of Fenwick visited their uncle, Dr. D. W. Loree and family, the fore part of the week.

In our correspondence last week we stated that Miss Nettie Wilson would teach the spring term of school in the Easlick district. We were wrongly informed; she will teach in the Darling district.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

W. J. Holdridge is improving very rapidly.

Vern Hoxsie is out again after a severe attack of diptheria.

Mrs. Frink is doing well with the exception of some rheumatic trouble for a few days.

Dr. O. D. Ford of Leslie, was the guest of Dr. Begel over Sabbath.

Rev. Chas. Rawson of Adrian preached at Holloway Sunday afternoon and evening.

Dr. Begel received a letter on Monday from the Post Office department stating that he had been appointed Postmaster at Holloway.

Al. Macham has got the roof on his house and is now prepared for rain. When finished it will be one of the finest residences on Macham avenue.

Willis Chatfield has just finished papering and painting his walls which adds decidely to their appearance. Wm. Collins did the work.

MACON MUSIC.

Mrs. Howell returned from Lansing last Saturday.

The concert held at the Reform Church last Friday evening was very interesting and reflected much credit on those who took part in the exercises.

Lester Collar is moving his old house preparatory to the building of a new one.

Rev. Mr. Kerridge's sermon last Sunday, on "How to read the Bible," was very instructive, and explained how to avoid many of the difficulties which perplex bible students.

The Sabbath school last Sunday voted to have a concert once every four weeks from next Sunday evening.

Rev. Mr. Kerridge will deliver a lecture on "John Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress" at the M. E. church, one week from next Sunday evening. As Mr. Kerridge is an entertaining and instructive speaker, this lecture will, doubtless, be an a literary treat to the people of Macon.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A free show of embroidery and how to make it with the White sewing machine enticed many to visit the Wilcox store on Saturday; but a Gipsy fortune-teller coaxed more money from their pockets than the merchants. If any one believes that faith in necromancy has faded out they had better visit the Plum-brook camp and forsake error. The woman equipped with enormous basket and pink apron, was supposed to carry the keys of fate; by wise and foolish, giddy and grave, and though the ministers did not ask to have past or future read for them, as I know of, they no doubt would but for setting an awful example. Just to hear what kind of story she would get up made many of the faithful toss over their half dollar; but you would imagine them true believers to see their look of anxiety when the wand waved over the love alphabet, and but for the changableness promised to all mankind affirm the whole clique are mismatched. Willingness to pay for being duped was demonstrated to their own and Gip satisfaction.

The usual number of liquor bonds have been accepted, and prosperity which waned with the old year again assured.

TIPTON TOPICS.

The meetings of the Literary Society will be discontinued for the present.

Bert Tuttle has moved from Tipton and now resides in the township of Rome.

Painters and carpenters have greatly improved the appearance of Mrs. Pitcher's hotel this spring; and a fresh coat of paint on Lon. Billington's house and barn makes the premises look neat and inviting.

Thos. Conlin started on Wednesday of last week on a trip through Kansas and other western states. Frank Erskine has returned to Dakota again to spend the summer. W. Perkins recently had a tooth extracted which caused him considerable annoyance and several days indisposition on account of the wound bleeding for hours after the tooth was drawn.

SPRINGVILLE SIFTINGS.

There will be no preaching at the M. E. Church on Sunday the 17th inst., there being quarterly meeting at Franklin Centre.

C. E. Jessup having purchased the hall and store of A. J. Ayres some time ago has had them, and everything connected, painted in fine style. He also has his store stocked up in a manner worthy of mention and looks as though there was to be a little business done in Springville yet.

The school board has overhauled the library and report it ready for use.

Bishop Harris was at the Junction on Wednesday last.

Farmers are compelled to put off sowing their oats, those that havn't, on account of the recent rains.

The Post Office remains with C. E. Jessup and the subject of removing it receives but little attention.

C. D. Smith has commenced operations on Ira Rogers house, but the weather is delaying his work considerably.

LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

This new Wonder of the World, which is now being loaded on the French transport Isere for shipment to this country, is the largest statue in the world. Some idea of its magnitude may be obtained from the fact that forty persons found standing room within the head. A six-foot man standing on the level of the lips only just reached the eyebrow. While workmen were employed on the crown of her head they seemed to be making a huge sugar caldron, and they jumped with ease in and out the tip of the nose. Fifteen people might sit around the flame of the torch, which elevation can be reached by a spiral staircase within the outstretched arm.

The London Daily News, in speaking of it, says: "It is out and away the largest statue of modern times. The Colossus of Rhodes was nothing to it. It could carry the 'Bravaria' or the 'Hermann' in its arms. It towers to the skies from the yard of the Rue de Chazelles, where it has been eight years in construction, and the view from its coronet sweeps clear of the six story houses and beyond the walls of Paris."

The weight of this stupendous statue is 440,000 pounds, of which 176,000 pounds are copper and the remainder wrought-iron. It is expected to arrive in New York about the 25th of May, where it will be erected on Bedloe's Island, this being the location selected for it by Gen. W. T. Sherman, who was appointed by the President to make the selection. When placed in position it will loom up 305 feet above tide-water, the height of the statue being 151.2 feet, that of the pedestal 91 feet, and foundation 52.10 feet.

This imposing statue, higher than the enormous towers of the great Brooklyn Bridge or the steeple of Trinity Church, which is the loftiest in the city of New York,—higher, in fact, than any of the colossal statues of antiquity,—by its rare artistic proportions, as well as by its stupendous dimensions, will add another to the Wonders of the World. A word should be said of its artistic merit. The pose, stride, and gesture, with its classic face, are pronounced perfect; the drapery is both massive and fine, and in some parts is as delicate and silky in effect as if wrought with a fine chisel on the smallest scale.

The conception and execution of this great work are due to the great French sculptor, M. Bartholdi, who has devoted eight years of his life and most of his fortune to this great work, and whose generous impulses, which must be on a scale commensurate with this noble work, prompted him to make such a gift to the United States. The committee in charge of the construction of the base and pedestal for the reception of this great work are in want of funds for its completion, and have prepared a miniature statuette, an exact counterpart of the original, six inches in height, the figure being made of bronze, the pedestal of nickel silver, which they are now delivering to suscribers throughout the United States for the small sum of $1 each. Aside from its being a lasting souvenir of this colossal statue, it will ornament our homes and bear testimony that we have contributed to the completion of one of the grandest works of modern times. All remittances should be addressed to Richard Butler, Secretary, No. 33 Mercer Street, New York. The committee are also prepared to [redacted] model, in same metals, twelve inches in height, at $5 each, delivered.

We feel assured our people will be only too eager to testify their greatful sense of the friendliness of this magnanimous offer on the part of the French people, and to reciprocate the kindly and liberal sentiments in which it originated, by thus aiding in an active prosecution of the labors that may be required to give the statue an appropriate base and pedestal. Now is the time to do it. Whoever wishes to have the honor and pleasure of contributing to the erection of the grandest statue of any age, to say nothing of the sentiment that should be welcomed and encouraged, must act promptly, for the money will be raised as sure as the sun rises. Every subscriber sending $1 will be supplied with a miniature counterpart of this great and imperishable statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World"

Hudson Gazette: Henry Howd has sold his Banker colt to Charlie Warner, of Elyria, Ohio, for $325. This fine Equine is a dark bay, five years old, and of excellent action. He has never been hitched to a sulky, but can show a 50 gait without much effort. He displays such fine stepping qualities that his career will be confined to the trotting course, and his friends wouldn't be surprised to see him rank among the best trotters ere many moons. He was bred on Clint. Blackmer's farm, in the township of Cambridge, this county. He was sired by Banker Rothchild's, dam by Royal George.

Banker Rothchilds is still owned by Frank Silyers of this village. His colts are scattered all over this section of the state; and the most of them are developing into splendid horses.

A decision of the supreme court, handed down, last week, decided the tax law to be unconstitutional. The court was equally divided on the matter, which affirms the adverse decree of Judge Chambers, of the Wayne circuit. The legislators have taken action on the matter and in accordance therewith the auditor general has ordered the suspension of the tax sales for this county.

THE LOST I. O. U.

Punishment, Though Long Delayed, Did Finally Come.

Some men seem to take a morbid pride in whatever promises to be unfortunate for them, and a most sure way of proof positive to the rule that Charles Day seemed on regarding Jonas Terry as his friend. There was nothing a moment between the men on a date for Josie Merritt, and such a circumstance is generally conducive to friendly feeling.

Charles had many talents and a good trade and a fine prospect. Jonas kept his face and his after some good military fashion, his features were small and commonplace, and he had a short, stumpy figure. Their mental differences were quite as great. Charles was rapid and bright, Jonas slow and secretive. Charles was affectionate and prodigal, Jonas saving and penurious and knowing how to make a penny at every winning one for himself. Both were young men of some fortune and position, and Jonas alone was a miser. Charles lived upon the rents of his property and believed the time to come when a present and to Josie Merritt a gift in kind.

One evening, a few days before the wedding, Jonas Terry and Charles Day were in the library of the latter's house. They had been discussing some business matters and Charles said:

"Jonas, I'm out of pocket at present, and I want you to let me have a little money."

"How much do you want?"

"About twelve thousand."

"What for?"

"Why, you see, I would put the use of it to a good account. In fact, ten thousand now might be worth fifty thousand to me."

Charles walked to the secretary and taking a roll of bills counted out the amount in bills and handed them to his friend, saying:

"Just give me your I. O. U. for two months after date. Will that be long enough?"

"You don't mean this, Charles?"

"Why, yes, I do, old fellow. It is not much of a business after all. You see, Merritt paid me my quarter's rents to-day and I shall be able to spend all before the quarter is over. I keep the money where I can get at it. In two months I shall be out of funds, and in the height of the season. It is a piece of luck to secure ten thousand for a clearing up in September."

"Take your money, Charles. I will accept the loan with pleasure, and if you should need it before, why, just drop me a line. I shall be out of trouble long before September."

The young man then drew a pen and some paper toward him, wrote out the "I. O. U." and handed it to his friend, observing, as he did so: "Allow me to say, Charles, that it is foolish to keep so much money here. Put it with your banker."

"Certainly. Merritt paid me this afternoon. It was so hot when he left I thought I would not go down-town until the morning. There is no danger. Nobody but you and Merritt and myself knows anything about it."

Then he folded the I. O. U., glanced at it, and rose to put in his secretary, but as he was crossing the room Jonas said: "I heard to-day that Josie Merritt is to marry Louis Lacheseis."

In an instant the young man's thoughts were diverted from his money affairs. He was much excited at the information, refused to believe it, and went over and over, with a passionate earnestness, his reasons for being certain that such a thing could not be.

"Why," he kept repeating, "I have known her ever since she was a little bit of a girl. I carried her books to school; I went with her to the dancing class; her father has been my lawyer and adviser. I have been as much at home in Merritt's house as in my own. Pooh! the thing is impossible. Josie never would treat me like that. I won't believe it."

"Go and ask her a straightforward question."

"I can't. It is too late to-night, and I leave by the noon train to-morrow. I intended to have that matter fully understood this summer, but I was in no hurry. A love affair is all spoiled when papa and mamma and the lawyer and the world come into it. I have told Josie that, and she and I understand [illegible]

[illegible]

"Jonas! You could not be such a scoundrel! You are joking of course."

"Mr. Day, I request you to leave my office at once, or I am not to be held for what I may do in my rage. I am sure you."

Then Charles struck the scoundrel, and there was such an uproar of words and blows that the police were called in, and the affair became sufficiently public, and indeed went into the courts. Of course Charles got the worst of it every way. He had no parcels of evidence to show for his claim, he was fast, fashionable and extravagant, while Jonas was universally spoken of as "methodical and reliable." Society turned the cold shoulder toward him, and mothers forbade their daughters to ride in his company or accept him for a partner in the dance. "But then," as Mrs. Merritt shrewdly said, "his engagement to our Josie has just become known."

It was remarkable that after this quarrel Jonas Terry's business grew with an amazing rapidity. Perhaps the saving of that ten thousand had been the turning-point of his fortune. We all know now the want of a five-dollar bill can sometimes lose us an amount amazingly disproportionate. Socially, too, his success was very great. He married a beautiful, stylish woman, who fully shared his antipathy to the Days, and who never lost an opportunity of mortifying them; and social slights are bitter enough to those whose whole life turns upon social success. In fact Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Terry, with their grand house and exclusive entertainments, and fine turn-out, were the Mordecai sitting in the gate of all Charles' and Josie's happiness.

Many a time the two had gone together over everything in the room, taken every book from the shelves, and examined every crevice in the cases, but all in vain. The I. O. U. was evidently lost, and Charles said, after every fresh search and disappointment, "No use, Josie, I tell you everything goes against honor and virtue. If you want to be pointed out as a pattern of all excellencies you must be in secret a natural and practical villain."

So the years went by—fifteen of them. The I. O. U. was not forgotten. They lived in a society where people have little else to do but remember the antecedents of its members, and Charles Day and his wife very often felt the influence of Jonas' accusation. The two men never spoke. If they passed each other on the drive, Jonas cracked his whip offensively, or Mrs. Terry looked scornfully at the shrinking couple, but [illegible]

RIDING HABITS.

The Fashionable Costume for Ladies When Indulging in Horseback Riding.

Horseback riding among ladies is become of more and more the fashion, and from present indications it will be more popular than ever the coming spring and summer," said a well-known ladies' tailor of New York to a reporter.

The demand for riding habits is growing every year, for riding-habits are increasing in number, and all are doing a wonderful business. The fact is the ladies of this country are just getting enough to the recreation, and besides, [illegible] you know, for it is all the fashion. Another reason, I suppose, is because physicians recommend it on account of its healthfulness. A number of important changes have been made in riding-habits recently, one of the most important of which is the doing away with the long, cumbersome train. This is entirely out of fashion, although you will see them now and then on the avenue. Instead, the habit is made shorter and square, with some regard to its fitting the saddle and the position of the rider when on the horse's back. Another new feature about the trade is that when we take a lady's measure for a habit we do not place her on a bench or raised contrivance, as was the rule not long ago, but we have a complete figure of a horse to sit upon. This horse is saddled and bridled in full, and is life size, about fifteen and one-half hands high. The horse of this description that we have was bought complete in Europe, and we have had it less than a year.

The most costly habit we have gotten up was at $200. It was made of cream-colored pique, profusely trimmed with gold braid. But this was a little out of the usual run, for the habits, as a rule, range from $75 to $150 in price. We used to make them of plain cloths and flannels, but now the demand is for diagonal and corkscrew goods. This latter is something quite new, and is made especially for riding habits. It is very elastic and does not catch the dust. The difference in the price is largely made up by the lining, the more expensive being lined with satin and soft white chamois skin. During last fall we made a great many of heavy weight goods at $140 each.

"Many of the habits which are ordered trimmed with the gold braid are for actresses, I find. They do not always use them for riding, although the more prosperous among the profession indulge in the luxury; but it has become quite the fashion to appear on the stage in riding-habits, as something new in the line of theatrical costumes. But the kind that we sell the most of is a large plaid of ecru-colored cloth, with corded edge. This has what is known as the 'postilion' jacket, and costs $140. Present indications are that the fashion in habits this summer will be to make them of handsome cream-colored pique. These will undoubtedly be seen in large numbers at Newport, Saratoga and other places of fashionable resort. Every summer we send from 150 to 200 of the most costly habits to Newport, Saratoga and Richfield Springs alone. Our customers, as a rule, are ladies of from 20 to 30 years of age, but we have lately been selling many to younger ladies, misses of 15 and 16 years, for many become proficient in the practice of riding while yet at school.—N. HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Works through the blood, regulating, toning and invigorating all the functions of the body.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores; so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

Sick headache? Piles, constipation, billious headache and dyspepsia, are all speedily cured by Hunt's Kidney and Liver Remedy.

A boy came home from school much excited, and told his father that the teacher said all human beings were descended from apes, which made the old man so mad that he replied angily: "That may be the case with you, but it ain't with me. I can tell you that, now."

BAD DRAINAGE causes much sickness. Bad blood and improper action of the liver and kidneys is bad drainage to the human sayfem, which Burdock Blood Bitters will remedy.

M. L. Blair, Alderman, 5th Ward, Scranton, Pa., stated Nov. 9, '83: He had used Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil for sprains, burns, cuts, bruises and rheumatism. Cured every time.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Adrian Press: Jerome Becannen, of Clayton, is the owner of a cub bear, sent him by express, by his brother, Paris Becannen. It is expected the cub will soon become a great favorite in Clayton society.

About forty or fifty cranks assembled at Corruno, Me., on the night of the 29th, draped in white robes, kept their eyes open all night and waited all next day to be taken to Heaven. At last accounts they were still on earth.

THE OLDEST WHITE SETTLERS.

Mr. S. B. Knapp writes to the Detroit Free Press from Blanchard, Mich., under date of May 1st, as follows:

In your issue of Saturday, April 18, you speak of the late Mrs. Sopharina Brigham as probably being the oldest living white resident of the State of Michigan, and that she came into the Territory in 1829. I write to put in a prior claim, being one of the four in one family that are now living and enjoying this beautiful State, who came into it in April 1826, fifty nine years ago and settled on the southwest quarter of section seven, town three north, of range eleven east, then called the Township of Oakland, now Avon, on the road from Pontiac to Rochester. Abner Knapp, my father, bought his land in February, 1824, and his deed is signed by James Monroe, President. My parents with three children, came up Lake Erie in a sail vessel and made the trip from Buffalo to Detroit in the short time of seven days.

We beg leave to put in a prior claim in favor of Tecumseh. Ezra F. Blood came to this village with the Musgrove Evans first pioneer party in June 1824, has lived here ever since, and is still in the enjoyment of good health. Mrs. Tilton and Mrs. Webster, sisters of the late Col. Spofford, came to Tecumseh with their father's family in July 1824, about 4 weeks after the original party. They enjoy good health and we hope they may remain with us for many years yet.

"SENTIMENTAL IMPRISONMENT."

It is said that Tom Navin is to have luxurious quarters fitted up for him in the state prison at Jackson. This intelligence will not be very favorably received by those who favor a vigorous and impartial administration of justice. There is no reason why Navin, who has violated the laws and outraged the confidence reposed in him by friends, should be pampered and petted, while some poor friendless devil is subject to the extreme penalty of the law. This modern tendency towards condoning crime in high places is one of the discouraging signs of the times.—Lansing Journal.

Commenting on the above, under the caption given to these extracts, the Detroit Evening Journal has the following:

The Lansing Journal, with some just strictures, gives circulation to a report that Navin, the imprisoned ex-mayor of Adrian, is to have his quarters in state prison fitted up luxuriously. It is understood that this will be done, of course, at his own expense, just as Boss Tweed fitted up his jail apartments, and Ferdinand Ward has more recently furnished his. The custom has become so common that when Fish, of the Marine bank, was put in a common cell the fact was thought to be of sufficient consequence to telegraph all over the country.

It is the defaulters who generally have money to spend in this way, and who are allowed so to spend it. A prison to them is nothing more than a house of detention. Penalty for crime becomes nothing more than restraint, under pretty free conditions. Punishment is a misnomer for such confinement. The criminal, who, by virtue of his social position, and confidence reposed in him, and his intelligence, should be held the most rigorously accountable for his misdeeds, is spared as much as possible. The law holds him responsible, but its officers virtually say to him: "Because there were exceptional reasons why you should not have offended the law we will do everything we can to shield you from its exactions." We did not suppose that Warden Hatch was actuated by this kind of sentimentality. We are loth to believe that he will permit the Michigan state prison to be turned into a club house for rich criminals. If he is a man to permit this thing there are a good many people in this state who would like to know it.

DEATH OF SUMNER F. SPOFFORD.

The deceased was born in Jeffrey, N. H. May 11, 1808.

The father of Col. Spofford came to Tecumseh with his family in July 1824, being one of the second party of pioneer settlers who came to this village, and located the eighty acre lot, which constitutes the east half of the old Dr. Patterson farm.

Sumner Spofford spent his minority with his father, and in 1830 drove the first stage that ever moved west of Tecumseh. In 1836 he was elected constable of Tecumseh, and during 12 years following he successfully held the offices of deputy sheriff, under sheriff, sheriff, and deputy U. S. marshal of Lenawee county. He removed to Adrian in 1843. In 1853 he became a conductor on the Michigan Southern & Northern Indiana road between Toledo and Chicago, which position he held till 1855. In Sept of that year he removed to DesMoines, Ia., and became the half owner in the DesMoines House, paying therefore $7,500. He subsequently purchased the remaining interest for $9,500 and conducted the hotel till 1862. He then rented the property for several years, but disposed of the same about two years ago, and then took up his residence in Tecumseh. In the spring of 1864 he was elected mayor of DesMoines and was for twelve years one of the directors of the State agricultural society, and became successively its vice-president and president. In addition he served as secretary and treasurer of the DesMoines school board. Among other public positions which he held in Iowa, were those of member of the immigration commission, and member of the Iowa centennial commission. He was also a director in the Citizen's national bank of DesMoines. At one time he owned considerable stock in the Iowa State Register, one of the leading newspapers of that state. Mr. Spofford was married in 1836, to Miss Emeline E. Bixby, daughter of David and Laura Bixby, of Adrian, by whom there were three children, Charles S., Ellen Eliza and Laura E., all of whom preceded their father in death. His wife died in July, 1878, and he was then left a widower and childless. Few men of the county have led a more honorable and successful career than Sumner Spofford, whose ability and energy assisted to lay the foundation of the present prosperity of Lenawee.

In February 1881, Col. Spofford was united in marriage to Harriet E. Wright, relict of the late Moses Wright, and for two years thereafter he continued to reside in Des Moines. In Sept., 1883, having disposed of his property there, he took up his permanent residence in Tecumseh, and was one of our most honored citizens until the day of his death. During his recent residence here he has been in poor health most of the time and hence formed but few acquaintances, but the few old settlers among us who knew him in the olden time, and the those of the younger generation who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, regarded him as one of nature's noblemen. He was, in every sense of the word, an honest man, the noblest work of God.

Among his immediate family friends who are left to mourn his departure, are his widow Harriet E. Spofford, two sisters—Mrs. W. W. Tilton, formerly Mrs. Bissell, and Mrs. Webster, both of whom live in Tecumseh—and one brother, McKensie Spofford, who lives at Napoleon, Ohio.

After a lingering attack of typhoid fever, his spirit took its flight to the Father who gave it on Monday, April 27th. A brief funeral service was held at his home on Tuesday morning at seven o'clock, and the remains were then transferred to DesMoines, Iowa, for final burial.

The funeral services at DesMoines took place on Wednesday afternoon, April 29. We gather a partial account of these final rites from the Iowa State Register of April 30th.

Since Col. Spofford retired from active participation in the affairs of the city and the county, the population has increased so wonderfully that he had come to be almost a stranger here, except among the old settlers and early acquaintances, who would of course never cease to remember him. His absence from the city for the past two or three years and the great number of people who have come to DesMoines in that time, tended to make the observance of the funeral services less general than at first one would suppose they would be, for a man who in former years was so prominent in the city. A great many of his old friends, however, attended the service at the church and assisted by their presence, and in other ways, in the last sad rites. The procession from the undertaking establishment to the church was quite imposing. The following were the bodies in line:

Detachment police force.
Detachment Fire Company.
Old Settlers.
Hearse and pall bearers.
Ex-Mayors of the city.
Mayor and City Council.
Ex-Councilmen.
County officials.

There were about sixty of the old settlers in the procession, and in all about one hundred and twenty-five men were in the line, and all of the offices in the county were represented. It was a quiet and a feeling tribute that these men paid to the memory of one who was so active in other days, in building up the material interests of the city and the county.

The procession left Mr. Harbach's place at 3:30 o'clock and reached the Episcopal church on the corner of 9th and High streets about four o'clock. The remains were taken to the altar, the procession being led by Dr. Van Antwerp, rector of the church, who repeated, in accordance with the Episcopal ceremony, "I am the resurrection and the life," etc. The beautiful ceremony of the church was then given in full, the large congregation uniting in the responses. The sermon by Dr. Van Antwerp was full of sympathy for the bereaved, a touching appeal to all present to be "likewise ready." He preached from 1st Corinthians, 15th chapter, 20th verse: "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept."

The rector recited many of the virtues of the departed man and paid a tribute to him for his early work in DesMoines, for his great generosity in helping to build up the city. He said there was something touching in the fact that one who helped to lay the foundation of the Episcopal church in this city, should be the first to be buried from the new church which he had in fact helped to build. The rector spoke especially of the great number of men and women before him whose locks are also silvered with the gray which tells that their days are being fast numbered. They were called together, he said, to do honor to the memory of one of their own number, who had lived more than his three score years and ten, and who had fallen by the way fully ripe and ready for the great harvest.

The following tribute to the deceased was written by Dr. Shafer, of Keokuk, and published in the Register. It is so tender and truthful, being the heartfelt words of a life long personal friend, that we cannot more fitly close this imperfect record, than by transfering it to our own columns.

KEOKUK, Iowa, April 28, 1885.—Editor State Register:—To-morrow the people of Iowa bury the body of Sumner F. Spofford. You of the city of Des Moines have a nearer claim than the thousands in all Iowa who knew him and who loved him. So let us who are far away help you to bury him. No man was more widely known, more held in affection than he. Those of us who came to Iowa thirty years ago recall his grand presence, his noble character, his great will, his every virtue. We loved him. He was friend and brother and helper to all who came within the circle of his influence. It is well that he desired that the old settlers should have charge of his funeral. He lived in the ideal of his old friends, and he loved them even as they loved him. No nobler soul ever went forth into the unknown. Who ever heard Col. Spofford speak an evil word of any man? Who ever came to him for aid and went away without hope and blessing? Who ever spent a dollar more royally? Who can say that he ever oppressed any man, woman or child on the face of the earth? Not one! He was grand in his public life. Some knew him best in the State Agricultural Society. In all those years of struggle and triumph, of failure and success, he was a man of firm decision and most excellent judgment. His word was law, because it was sanctified by truth, and free from all personal motive of preferment. We loved Sumner F. Spofford. Love is the word. We have eaten salt with him at his table and at our own, and a hint of treachery in his life, or of insincerity in his acts, was never once entertained. He was a man all over. Many of his letters attest the greatness of his manhood. He did not know how to do a mean thing.

But, in his home, where all the virtues shown forth, he was best known. Valorous and faithful in his work for the public, he was sublime in the duty which ever made his home a blessing. Don't you remember how he watched and worked when his son Charlie lingered on the edge of death—for long weary months? Not a word of complaint ever came from the lips of that grand old father, Col. Spofford. Don't you remember his devotion to the little granddaughter? Good God, how he loved that little invalid; and how he gave his soul for her recovery. All the stars in the sky, all the flowers that blush in the valley, all the leaves that flash in the glad sunlight, were not so beautiful to Col. Spofford as that crippled granddaughter! How he nursed her day and night, how he moaned and prayed and worked and employed the highest skill for her recovery! And when death—a sweet relief—came to her, then was the soul of the grand man bowed down in grief, and only the comfort of Christ gave him release.

Who has been more moderate in success than Col. Spofford; who more patient in adversity than he? Who more forgiving, more lenient, more gentle than he? Not one

Others to-day will speak of him from many standpoints. A certain intimacy with him reveals the fact that he had faith in God and in the immortality of the soul. That was his creed. He had no fear of death. He said more than once that in the litany when it came to the prayer, "From sudden death, Good Lord deliver us," he kept his soul still. I want to die at my work, on the street, in my office, at once, without any warning, actively engaged doing good to somebody." That was his inspiration. As often as the Register has come these few weeks telling us that Sumner had typhoid fever, so often has come his oft repeated wish that he should die suddenly, while at his allotted task in doing what he could that the world might be better for his having lived in it. Grand old man! grand in the past, grand in the possibilities of the future life. Proud manhood that has gone back to God who gave it! Sumner F. Spofford has gone from us, but he leaves a memorial more lasting than all monuments of brass or marble—a sacred memory of a man who loves truth and honor and righteousness above all other riches.

C. N. Stair, of Petoskey, has patented a "refrigerator" that is going to revolutionize the meat business. He can hold a temperature of 32 degrees when the thermometer stands at 70 or 80 outside, and can freeze meat solid by the use of salt. He has built a mammoth one in his market that will hold 4½ tons of meat.

Col. Eldredge went to Washington last week.

On Saturday evening, May 16th, Thomas W. Keene, supported by his tragedy company, appears at the opera house in Adrian in RICHARD III. As Richard, Mr. Keene is acknowledged to be without a peer, artistically surpassing Booth, Barrett or Irving in this particular role. His company is particularly strong, including some of the best known actors and actresses in the profession. The scenery and wardrobes used in the production of the play will be the same costly ones used in the presentation of Richard III at the recent Cincinnati dramatic festival, in which Keene, McCullough, Barrett, Rhea, Mary Anderson, Clara Morris and other well-known stars participated. They were purchased by the tragedian at great expense. Seats for the Adrian performance may be secured by letter or telephone to C. M. Croswell, Jr., manager opera house at Adrian, the scale of prices being $1,00 75 and 50 cents.

"The author of "Trajan" cannot complain that his novel is not thoroughly advertised," says the 'Lounger' in THE CRITIC. "His publishers have done all that is usual for publishers to do, and have even pressed the perambulating 'sandwich' into their service. At almost any hour of the day you may meet a squad of these slow but sure-footed men, strolling along Broadway with the legend 'Trajan' blazoned in bold black letters on their backs and breasts. If Cassell & Co. are going to advertise that next novel in this way, the combination will be amusing. They have just announced for early publication a story by Maurice Thompson called 'At Love's Extremes.' I think there will be a sensation on Broadway the day an army of 'sandwiches' thus labelled marches solemnly down that thoroughfare."

SOLOMON SMITH'S WILL.

Case Now on Trial in the Circuit Court.

Years ago, we do not know how many years ago, there settled in Ridgeway, at the head of the prairie commonly known in the days past as "Baxter's" prairie, two brothers who were Englishmen. They were large land holders and owned, it is variously stated, from six hundred to nine hundred broad acres of land which they cultivated and grazed. Their names were George and Solomon Smith. They were bachelors and dwelt in one house, and were men of hermit-like characters. Some of the cattle in their herds were known to attain the age of nine years before sale, and to capture them necessitated a resort to the corral. Their wheat also was sometimes allowed to remain in the stacks for years, a prey to time and the rats.

The Smiths never married, that being an agreement between them. About the year 1859, however, as appears by the evidence in the trial, the brothers secured the services of a woman named Unice Covell to be their housekeeper. Through various dispensations, both human and divine, Mrs. Covell had been several times married. In the course of time, after engaging with the Smiths as housekeeper, Mrs. Covell became the mother of a child, of the paternity of which there was much obscurity. It was generally accredited to Solomon Smith, the younger of the bachelor brothers. Later Mrs. Covell had trouble about her wages and sued the Smiths. During the suit it transpired in some manner that Solomon had admitted the child of Mrs. Covell to be his, which was the first intimation to that effect the elder brother had of it. At the conclusion of the suit, Solomon, the testimony goes, announced his desire to formally declare the child (a girl) to be his in the presence of witnesses and to make a will, bequeathing her his entire property at his death. Alonzo Carter, a country squire, drew the will, which was signed and witnessed. Mrs. Covell, who is in court, testifies that the transaction took place at the home of her mother and that the will was placed by Smith in the old lady's hands for safe keeping. Sometime later during a severe sickness the old lady, believing herself about to die, in the presence of witnesses passed the will over to Mrs. Covell. At a still later period a fire occurred in which Mrs. Covell testifies that the will was destroyed. On the testimony of living witnesses, however, the will of Solomon Smith was duly probated. Whether the elder brother, George, was cognizant of the action of Solomon in the bequest of his property we do not know. However at his death he left all his property to Solomon and under the terms of the will of the latter, by which all his property at his death should be inherited by the daughter by Mrs. Covell, the said daughter would become heir to the estate of George as well; this, of course, provided that the trial establishes the validity of Solomon Smith's will. It is on testimony that Solomon, before he died, was asked if he had satisfactorily arranged for the heirship of his property, and he replied that he had and that he referred to the will in favor of the girl Hattie.

The contestant's side of the case has not yet been reached. The estate involved is very considerable and a stubborn contest is waged at every step of the trial. A formidable array of legal talent is in the field, Millard & Weaver, C. A. Stacy and Fred Wood, conducting the case for the contestants and C. R. Miller, "administrator with will annexed," and Bean, Underwood & Lane for the proponents.

The litigant most interested in the result of the trial is the would-be heir, Hattie, now Mrs. Gifford, who is in court and is a lady of prepossessing appearance and evident intelligence. —Record.

We need not go out of Michigan to find noble and worthy examples of that lofty spirit of self denial that sometimes carries men above the plane of office. Two democrats elected as constables of Seneca township have failed to qualify.

GUMBO STARTS A GARDEN.

Mrs. Gumbo sat in the rocking chair last evening, doing up Sally's hair in papers that she might make a presentable appearance at the school examinations this afternoon, when Joshua rushed in from the woodshed with a big sliver in his finger. He had been trying to put a new handle in the spade, and had introduced about three inches of green oak timber into the index finger of his left hand. Mrs. Gumbo has not brought up six children and buried three without learning something. She is quite a surgeon in her way. The family medicine chest was produced, and with the aid of a pair of forceps and a corkscrew the sliver was extracted. The finger was properly bandaged with cotton batting soaked with arnica and camphor, a buckskin cot, clipped from an old mitten was tied on it, and Joshua then filled his corn cob pipe for a farewell smoke before retiring.

"This little accident, 'Joshua, reminds me," said Mrs. Gumbo, as she snuffed the candle, and rocked little "Queen Bess," the baby, to sleep, "that I received last Monday a copy of Vick's Floral Guide. It is an elegant edition. I have been perusing it carefully and have selected a list of vegetable and flower seeds to send for with which to start a garden. Last summer the front yard was ornamented with milk weed and the back yard with Canada thistles. I have resolved upon having a garden this summer, and it is high time that we were beginning the work."

"Jerusalem, Jerusha, be you crazy? What d'ye take me for? I aint no Scotch gardner. I kin dig post holes, that's true. I kin cut cord wood. I kin shovel ashes. I kin pull weeds. I kin lay in water melons, that's true, and I kin worry down green corn—crook neck squash aint bad eat'in, though I like peanuts better. Hoss radish is werry good to take, that's true. Carrots makes good cow fodder, and beans—well, beans is beans, that's all. But, hang it, Jerusha, I never made no garden. Why, it'll take more money'n we kin rake and scrape to buy seeds with, and when the seeds is bought, we've only jest got started. It beats all how little wimen know 'bout farmin. Why, the garden must be plowed 'n then it must be raked, 'n then it must be laid out into allies 'n beds, 'n then the seeds must be sot out, 'n then the wegitables must be cultiwated, 'n then the weeds must be pulled, 'n then the beds must be hoed over 'n then the cabbage and termaters must be watered, 'n then the pertaters must be hilled up, 'n then the peas must be bushed, 'n then the grape wines must be pinched off, 'n then the scare crows must be sot up. Why, hang it, Jerusha, it costs a fortune ter run a good gardin. I've bin through the mill one season afore. Don't ye mind, Jerusha, when we had a tarin' old freeze up one Fourth o' July? Wall, thats the summer I run a gardin. Two months work and a gardin full o' wegitables all friz up in one night. Why, Jerusalem, Jerusha, haint you got no sence left? As soon as the seeds was all sot, it would begin to rain 'n would jest rain 'n rain, 'n then the weeds would jest grow 'n grow, and then the drowth would come on and things would jest dry up 'n dry up, and when the melons got ripe the boys would go coonin 'n coonin. Remember Job, Jerusha, remember Job. Possess yer gizzard in patience. Wait till the applesass tree gits to bearin' and we won't need no gardin then."

"Hush, Joshua, and hold your tongue. You are always opposed to public and private improvements. That does'nt surprise me at all. But I have investigated this matter fully. I have counted the cost, and I am bound to ornament these premises with a garden, this very summer. I will communicate with the clerk of the weather and prevail upon him to postpone the Fourth of July freeze. My list of seeds is ready to send and I have five dollars laid aside, which I have saved from five washings, to enclose as a remittance. You can get the garden plowed and prepared in half a day, and Sammy and I will take care of the after work. If it rains, of course, Joshua, we will let it rain, but Sammy and Sally can keep the weeds down. I shall put in a few snap beans; some artichokes; a dozen hills of long mangle wurzel beets; early and late peas; a row of celery; cabbage and cucumbers, of course; some nutmeg melons and gypsy watermelons; Hubbard squash; Trophy tomato; flat Dutch turnips; early long horn carrot; excelsior pumpkins; telephone potato, and onions—well, Joshua, I know that onions are your favorite beverage. Take the pencil and transcribe the order for onions yourself. I will liquidate the bill. The rear yard will be devoted to the vegetable garden and the front yard to flowers. I shall have an angelic flower garden, Joshua. The castor-bean, cocks-comb, dahlia, gladiolus, hyacinth, lily of the valley, marigold, bachelor's button, morning glory, mignonette, passion flower, pink, petunia, poppy, paeony, hollyhock and sunflower will all be represented. Our front lawn will be transformed into a paradise before harvest time begins. The delicious perfume of flowers which will be wafted down Pocahontas Alley will cause the bumble bee to sing with delight, and the Smiths over the way to shed tears of envy. Put a new handle in the hoe and rake, Joshua, borrow a seed drill of some neighbor and leave the rest to me. But a garden I am bound to have, in this year of Grace 1885."

"Well 'taint no use, I s'pose, to fight agin a woman. If you'll foot the bills and tend the gardin and let me order the onions, I'll give in. We'll have a gnruptious gardin, that's sartin."

A garden, a garden, and how shall we make it?
The first day we'll spade, and dig, next day we'll rake it.
Then cabbage, tomatoes, and parsley we'll set,
And onions, you bet.

Some choice tulip bulbs which have been scattered through,
A few early peas and some peppergrass too,
And vegetable oysters, we must not forget,
Not onions, you bet.

We'll block out a corner for lettuce to till,
And a nook for the poppy and gay buffedil,
The bright marigold and the sweet violet,
And onions, you bet.

We'll plant a few seeds of the royal cucumber,
And melons and squash and mushrooms without number,
And down the front walk a nice pink parapet,
And onions, you bet.

A few morning glories so handsome to see,
And a long double row of the Blue Peter pea,
The hollyhock, paeona, and sweet mignonette,
And onions, you bet.

The phlox grandiflora, that choice diadem,
The early blood beet and McLean's Little gem,
The smilax and ivy for Queen's coronet,
And onions, you bet.

THE CANINE AND EQUINE PARADOX.

This evening one of the most pleasing shows ever seen here will hold the boards at the opera house. Of this entertainment the Cleveland Herald says: "For the past few days Prof. Morris and his trained dogs have been in this city and as these were exercised daily upon our streets our people have seen enough to know that the performance would be one of great merit and turned out last night in such numbers as to soon fill the house as it was never filled before. Still the throng applied for admission, and it is estimated that fully five hundred people had to be turned away from the doors and denied admission. No man living has the reputation as a trainer as that amassed by the professor, and no man ever had a more intelligent lot of dogs to educate. Each of his 25 stars possess almost human intelligence and their feats are both comical and wonderful. Each of the canines is a specialist and a true artist. At the head of the troup stood the redoubtable 'Major,' the greatest known clown. His antics showed almost human knowledge and kept the audience in a constant roar. Sneider, with his wife, came in wheeling the baby, the exact picture of a fond father of the genuine type. 'Shelbark' gave most valuable support to 'Major,' and all took substantial parts. The great leaping scene was of more than ordinary interest and gave the graceful greyhounds an opportunity to show their power. 'Foyletta' the champion, does the most wonderful feat ever known, clearing thirty five feet, at the same time rising twelve feet in the air. Truly he is an 'air king.'"

Northwestern Lumberman: Some time ago it was stated that a traffic arrangement had been formed between the Ohio & Michigan railroad, extending from Toledo to Allegan, Mich., and the Chicago & West Michigan system by which lumber could be run from Muskegon or other points on the Chicgo & West Michigan to Toledo, on a single rate. It has recently been announced that this arrangement has been put in operation. The distance from Muskegon to Toledo is 214 miles. This traffic combination is considered an important one for the western Michigan lumber interest.

HE FELL IN THE STREETS.
Kennedy's Favorite Remedy Cures a Terrible Case of Gravel When Other Help Failed.
What is gravel? What causes it, and who are most likely to get it? It is frequently attended with the pain, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and many age [illegible] although men who have passed middle age are the most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for gravel, as the disease seems to be on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter selected from many similar communications:
Pittsfield, Mass., March, 1881.
Dr. David Kennedy:
Dear Sir—You have a right to know, and I desire the opportunity to make my experience with your valuable remedy known through the use of Favorite Remedy. I am a carpenter living in this place, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away and I had little more trouble until last July, 1880. One day when at work in my shop I was suddenly seized with a sharp and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said "I can do nothing for you. Your case is incurable!" I was confined and kept to the bed which was all the pain gave me a prescription. It did no good. Then began a series of experiments, the agony and horror of which would shake the strongest frame. I was sometimes taken in the throes while at work, and would be writhing with agony upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven I then heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Brought me by P. Crosby. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. Persevered with the medicine, the symptoms generally abated, and I have no more trouble from it. I am well, thanks to your Favorite Remedy. Yours most gratefully,
JAMES D. KENNEDY.
What Favorite Remedy did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to write for advice, Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

THE TYPE-WRITER.

A Labor-Saving-Machine Which Sprung Immediately Into Popularity.

The click of the type-writer is one of the most familiar sounds to the frequenters of down-town offices. In nearly every large office one or more of these little machines can be found in constant use and they are still growing in popularity.

About ten years ago the first type-writer was invented. It was patented by two Detroit men who soon sold their rights to the machine, but drew a royality on it for some years. One of these men was a printer by trade, and for years he had been experimenting with a writing machine to supplant the pen. He first invented a machine for numbering automatically the pages of books such as ledgers. When the type-writer was first upon the market it was a crude machine, very different from what it is to-day. The foot was brought into operation in it to pull back the carriage upon which the paper was rolled, somewhat like a sewing machine. There were various other clumsy appliances connected with it, and the machine was regarded by the public more as a curiosity than as a practical writing instrument. A few large offices, however, began the use of type-writers, and the advantages of the instrument were seen where a large number of manifold copies were required and it was desirable to have a very plain and easily deciphered copy. Improvements were made from time to time in the mechanism, and as the machine was gradually being perfected it became more and more popular.

Meanwhile its success prompted other inventors to apply themselves to the subject of writing machines. One of the first to come out was invented in Sweden and patents obtained upon it throughout Europe. The principle of this type-writer was radically different from that of the American machine. Instead of the type being arranged in a circular pocket and flying up to hit the paper, in the foreign machine the type and keys were arranged like pins in a pincushion and the instrument was in the shape of a hemisphere. With the keys sticking out all over its surface it very much resembled a porcupine. This machine was very small and could almost be carried in the pocket. It had many advantages over the American machine, and likewise many disadvantages.

Hardly had the foreign machine been upon the market than another American machine came out upon some of the principles of the first machine, the patents upon which had expired. This was followed on an altogether different plan, the type being made of rubber and all together on a little pad. When writing the letter is brought over a small hole in a plate and through this hits the paper, all the other types at the same time taking up a supply of ink. On the other machines an inked ribbon is brought between the type and the paper, and the ink takes the shape of the letter pressing against it.

This was followed by still another machine wherein the type, made of hard rubber in the form of a cylinder, revolved in a horizontal cavity and the paper was driven up against the type by the release of a small hammer every time a letter was struck. One of the advantages of this latter machine is that an infinite number of characters can be used in it and type for writing in German and other foreign languages can be inserted at will.

A member of the Turkish Legation in the United States not long ago expressed his admiration of the type-writer and his intent on of having one made that would write in the Turkish language. There are thirty-three letters in this language, and Hassin Effendi made a copy of them and gave it to an engraver to make a set of letters for the type-writer. It was only at the last moment that he discovered that all the type-writers work from left to right, as the English language is written, while Turkish is written from right to left. The excessive cost of altering a machine to write in this direction decided him not to get one. A type-writer for writing in any language can be made, however.

The manufacture of type-writers is now an important American industry. Nine-tenths of all the type-writers used in the world are made in this country. The traveler can now find the American machines in daily use in England, France, Germany, Russia, and indeed in all the European countries. The English Government, which is very slow to make changes of a radical or progressive nature, has adopted the American type-writer, and in all the Government offices in India, as well as those in London and elsewhere the machine is in constant use.

The Chinese are about the only people who will be left out of the type-writing nations. There are so many thousand characters in their language that it would be impossible to construct a machine capable of doing their work.

There are many thousands of type-writers in daily use in New York city and the instrument has long since ceased to be a curiosity. With the telephone, the Wall street ticker and the type-writer a part of every well appointed office, the duties of clerks have indeed been revolutionized within the past half century.

Very many authors now write all of their books and magazine articles on the type-writer, and among these are W. D. Howells and Mark Twain. The Declaration of Independence was not written on a type writer, but if Thomas Jefferson lived in this age he would probably have ticked off his immortal document upon one of these little labor-saving machines. A legal decision has been rendered to the effect that although type-written manuscript is printed, it is writing all the same, and the postal authorities regard it as written matter, which must pay full postage.

One of the openings for women that are constantly coming up is copying manuscript on the type-writer, and very many girls and young women now find it a pleasant and remunerative business. Short-hand writers have also found the type-writer a valuable aid, and lawyers are beginning to use it for writs and other legal documents.

THE SOUDAN TROUBLES.

Considerations of Humanity and Civilization Demand the Settlement of the Egyptian Difficulty.

For one day the thoughts of the civilized world were recently turned to one man, and that man one of the most romantic figures of contemporary history—General Gordon. His remarkable ride across the desert to Khartoum was in harmony with his strange career, and his long solitary hold of the town, enveloped by a hostile race burning with religious zeal, and his disappearance upon the very eve of succor, were but natural events in a story so extraordinary. The news of his death also produced in England a deep and universal excitement, which in intensity was doubtless like that which followed the tidings from Waterloo, or the Sepoy rebellion, or the passage of the Dardanelles by the English fleet. For a moment party strife was outwardly composed, and Tories and Liberals were only Englishmen resolved that the man who stood for England in the African desert howling with enemies should be avenged. The Past and the Future were forgotten in the duty of the Present. Why England was upon the Upper Nile in arms, or what disaster might impend in India, was not to be considered while the fate of Gordon was unknown.

But to us who look upon the English campaign in Egypt only as sympathetic spectators, the old proverb seems more than ever true: What is worth doing is worth doing well. This was Chatham's principle nearly a century and a half ago. It was the principle of Napoleon in the field and in the Cabinet. It is the practical rule of success everywhere. Whether you are going to hunt a hare or a tiger, whether you march to meet barbarians or civilized regulars, the first and vital condition of success is not to underestimate the task, and to abandon it rather than to undertake it inadequately. But a government and its enterprises are continuous, and in England and in this country when the popular will decrees a change of administration, the newcomers must deal with a situation already made for them. England drives the Jingo from the helm, but he has set the course of the ship, and the Liberal must take it as he finds it.

The Jingo took England to Egypt, and combined with France to control its Government. When he was dismissed, it was not possible simply to withdraw from Egypt. But it was equally impossible to remain without a strong hold a determined policy. This is the point at which the Liberal seems to have failed. Apparently there was not a definite policy vigorously pursued, but an acquiescence in the vague demand of public sentiment—a following rather than a leading. When Gordon was sent to Khartoum, he should have been sustained by a commanding force. If England was to remain in Egypt at all, she should have staid for a purpose, and have supplied the means to accomplish it. What is worth doing is worth doing well.

But the cheerful aspect of the situation at the darkest moment was the response of England. In great emergencies the old quality of the English shows itself. There is not panic or despondency, but a wrathful resolution to atone for all short-comings by a mighty recuperation. The press had but one voice. All day, says the dispatch, the War Office was thronged with officers offering their services. Every Englishman felt a personal appeal. It was not what will this or that party do? but the tone of all that was said, the spirit of the whole people, was that England expects every man to do his duty. That duty is the rescue, if possible, of brave English soldiers, and the settlement of the Soudan trouble, with the broadest regard for the interests of humanity and civilization.—George William Curtis, in Harper's Magazine.

Sweets to the Sweet.

"I'm going to get married," said he, as he placed a hand upon the counter as large as a Dutch cheese, "and I want a wedding cake."

"It is customary," said the pretty bakery girl, "nowadays to have the materials of the cake harmonize with the calling of the bridegroom. For a musician, now, we have an oak cake, for a man who has no calling and lives upon his friends, the sponge cake; for a newspaper paragrapher, spice cake, and so on; what is your calling, please?"

"I'm a pugilist."

"Then you want a pound cake."—Boston Courier.

—"Here, mister, you've dropped your overshoe!" he shouted, as an old man got out of the street-car and hoisted his umbrella. The man didn't appear to hear, so the kind-hearted passenger picked up the shoe and threw it after him, hitting him in the back. The old gentleman shook his fist angrily, and walked off without picking up the rubber. Everybody laughed, especially the shoe-thrower, until a little boy stopped eating peanuts and said to him: "I guess you dropped that shoe yourself, mister. You've only got one on." And the renewed laughter jarred the car, as the benevolent gentleman climbed out to catch the next car back.—Chicago Times.

—A German paper reports a singular example of what it regards as the sagacity of sharks. A man fell overboard from a German ship. The place was known to be infested with sharks, but to the astonishment of the crew not a single specimen appeared. The man managed to keep afloat, and a life buoy was thrown to him. Unhappily he missed it; whereupon another member of the crew jumped in to the rescue. He had barely reached the drowning man when a huge shark rushed up like a flash of lightning, and, seizing both men in his jaws, dragged them under. The shark evidently did not believe that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.

—In a New York jewelry store window is exhibited a large knot, cut from a tree, which is the exact counterpart of a human ear.—N. Y. Mail.

COLONEL JAMES M. MORGAN.

Col. Jas. M. Morgan of South Carolina, who was appointed as Consul Gen'l to Australia by President Cleveland on April 18th, 1885, is by birth a Louisanian and is the youngest of five sons of the late Judge Thomas Gibbs Morgan. He was appointed to a cadetship in the Naval Academy at Annapolis before he was twenty years of age, and shortly after made acting mid-shipmen. Upon the outbreak of the "late unpleasantness" he entered the Confederate service and became lieutenant on the Alabama. Shortly after the close of the war he was married to a daughter of Trewholm who had been a member of Jefferson Davis' Cabinet, and settled in South Carolina. His wife dying he went to Egypt in 1870, and entered the service of the Kedive on the staff of Gen'l Loring, having been endorsed for the position by Robert E. Lee and others under whom he served. He was considered the most finished horseman in the Kedive's army, and his feats were admired by all. At this time George Butler was our Consul General at Cairo. The two became bitter enemies and the feud ended in a quarrel in Washington which resulted in the banishment of Butler. Col. Morgan has visited every part of the world and Australia is as well known to him as Greenland or Iceland. He converses fluently in several languages and is well fitted for the responsible position to which he has been appointed. Mr. Morgan owes his appointment in a great measure to F. W. Dawson of the Charleston News and Courier, to whom President Cleveland owes much for his ardent support in the convention and during the campaign. Besides this he had the endorsement of Senator Hampton of South Carolina, Senator Gorman of Maryland, Hon. B. F. Merrick and other prominent democrats.

PROF. BAILEY'S LECTURE.

The lecture on Astronomy by Prof. F. H. Bailey for the benefit of the G. A. R. relief fund will be given at the Opera House on Tuesday evening next, May 12th. We hope to see a crowded house. Tickets only twenty five cents. For sale at Adamson's and Hough & Hosmer's. From a large number of complimentary notices we select the following.

Those who failed to attend the lecture given last evening by Professor Bailey, missed a rare treat. The audience was composed mostly of pupils and teachers, all of whom were very much interested in the talk and the illustrations. Nine people out of every ten could hear a learned discourse on astronomy unaccompanied by illustration, and go away without comprehending the celestial phenomena of which they had been hearing. The use of the cosmosphere, however, in Prof. Bailey's lecture makes everything plain. The instrument is one of his own inventions, and represents the heavens of the northern hemisphere. It works upon a wire frame and is used to show the various positions of the sun and stars, as seen from any point on the northern hemisphere of the earth, at any time. The northern heavens are thus visible to the audience in as perfect a manner as if the gazer was out of doors in a clear night. The groups of stars were pictured out on the illuminated globe in dark figures, representing the different creations with which the fancy of ancient people peopled the heavens. The cosmosphere is simple yet wonderful. It is described as "the largest globe in America, as transparent as glass, and brilliantly illuminated; illustrates more celestial phenomena than any other instrument; shows the heavens as seen from any point on earth for every minute of the year, and the movements of sun, moon and stars for any length of time."

Bishop Warren, author of Recreations in Astronomy says:

This lantern has received the highest commendations for simplicity, accuracy and perfect adaptation to the student's needs, from the most eminent astronomers in the country. Asaph Hall, of the United States Observatory, at Washington; James Curley, of the Observatory of Georgetown College; C. S. Hastings, of the John Hopkins University, and many others. This instrument is the inveution of Professor F. H. Bailey, of Hillsdale College, in Michigan. We are glad to know it will soon be in the market.

Two years later (Aug. 15, 1882), during a lecture on Astronomy, before the C. L. S. C., in the Hall of Philosophy, at Chautauqua, N. Y., Bishop Warren said, concerning the lantern, of which he was speaking: "It is beyond question, the greatest invention in this line that has been made. It is approved of by such astronomers as Proctor and Prof. Asaph Hall, the most distinguished in the United States, and of such names as carry weight and authority anywhere. It has done more for the study of the heavens and the ease of understanding the uranography of the skies than any other invention that has been made."

VALPARAISO, Ind., March 14, '85.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I have had the pleasure of hearing Prof. Bailey, as well as examining the apparatus which he has invented. The lecture was one of the most instructive that I have ever heard. Any lecture association or school of any grade can employ the Professor with the certain security that the lecture will more than give satisfaction. Too much praise cannot be given in behalf of his invention. They are superior in every particular and the apparatus will certainly find its way into every school.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

We clip the following from the Adrian Times of Thursday last.

An accident, involving the narrow escape from instant death of two people, occurred at the Winter street crossing of the Lake Shore road in this city last evening. The fast mail train, which leaves this city, westward bound, at about six o'clock p. m., standard time, struck the horse of Mrs. Levi Auchampaugh, on the crossing named, fatally injuring the horse, smashing the carriage, and badly bruising the occupants, Mrs. Auchampaugh and her little child. The two were enjoying a ride about town, and had driven south on Winter street to Cross street, where Mrs. Auchampaugh hesitated a moment as to the further direction to be pursued. Hearing no sign of any approaching train, she concluded to drive south, across the railroad track, and her horse was almost upon the rails, when the train was first discovered, the engine being already upon the east cattle guard of the crossing. The horse discovered the impending danger at the same moment, and reared and plunged violently to the east, the engine striking it about the shoulder a moment after, and hurling horse, carriage and occupants in a confused heap, sixty feet west of the point of collision. The blow was a terrible one, and the horse was frightfully mangled, while the carriage was completely smashed. Mrs. Auchampaugh and the child, although hurled from the distance named with such awful force, did not suffer serious injury, although they will not readily recover from their bruises and the nervous shock. The child also sustained some severe scalp wounds. The horse, when struck, was facing to the west, but when it landed after the blow it was facing east, the animal and carriage being reversed. The news of the accident spread rapidly, the train stopping, so that shortly after a large crowd assembled.

Constable Payne was one of the first to appear at the scene of the accident and to render assistance to the unfortunate victims. The horse was killed, its injuries placing it beyond the hopes of recovery. It is thought by many that the railroad company will be compelled to pay damages for the affair. The top of the carriage was raised at the time of the collision, so that, had there been time, it would have been very difficult for Mrs. Auchampaugh to have escaped before the engine struck the horse.

There are a number of much varied stories in circulation in regard to this affair, but we have taken pains to ascertain the exact facts, and believe they are set forth above.

The base burner is on its last legs and the man who pays the coal bills heaves a sigh of relief.

A drummer, travelling out of Detroit, remarkable for his politeness, was in the city this week, and having occasion to use the telephone, rang up central office. In response to his "hello" came a reply in the silvery tones of a lady's voice, but before continuing the conversation he gave evidence of his habitual politeness, by doffing his hat and laying it in a chair. He never yet broke over his rule of lifting his hat when talking with ladies.

Bert is a noble young man and has made many friends in our town. He and his bride, who is one of South Bend's fairest belles, are to be congratulated upon their choice of companionship. That their future life may be wreathed with roses is the wish of their many friends.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

To Mr. and Mrs. Lisle Gibson, May 8th, a son.

George Freese came here from Detroit, to remain until the first of June. He will take Ben Ellis's place in the store during his absence.

Mrs. David Hibner, who has been ill for several months, died at her home last Sunday. Funeral services were held Tuesday, Rev. Kerridge officiating.

J. C. Burroughs has given up going to Tecumseh to live.

One day last week Josiah Howell had started to go home from town, and had driven as far as John Clark's when his team became frightened, and run over a mile before he succeeded in stopping them. Only his good horsemanship and presence of mind saved him from a serious accident.

Mrs. W. S. Whittelsey and children returned to Ypsilanti last Monday, after a visit here of four weeks. Mrs. Whittelsey is much improved in health.

The two children of P. C. Smith, are quite sick with chicken-pox.

Mrs. Ed. Rowland, Mrs. John Heesen, Mrs. Bell and Miss Hessie Cupples, of Tecumseh, were the guests of Mrs. J. E. McCollum last Saturday.

Miss Anna Larzelere has returned from Saline, where she has been spending the winter.

Mrs. Josie St. John held a musical at her home last Saturday. It was greatly enjoyed by those present. Her patrons feel a great deal of satisfaction in her mode of teaching, and her pupils certainly give evidence of very careful training.

Miss Lou Reynolds intends having her house on Chicago street painted on the outside.

The Congregational Sunday School entertainment, held last Saturday evening was not productive of as good a financial result as might have been desired, only a little over ten dollars being taken in at the door. Those who took part in the program all did themselves credit, and the entertainment was well worthy of far better patronage.

As Charles Wilson was coming from the flour mill up town, last week his horses commenced to run, resisting all efforts at control until they reached the Local Office. James Hause happened to be on the street with his team and saw Mr. Wilson's horses coming just in time to drive across the street ahead of him, and in that way stopped them.

The Episcopal social will be held at Mrs. S. F. Marstellar's this week Thursday evening. This is to be a "weight social." Let every one come, be weighed, guess on their friend's weight, and have a dish of ice cream.

W. S. Kimball returned from Chicago last Saturday, where he has been to buy wool for the factory.

Miss Carrie Huntington is visiting at Mrs. Will Wood's.

McAdam & Muir have placed a very fine organ in their meat market to be sold by lottery. Every one purchasing one dollar's worth of meat is given a ticket, and when a certain number of tickets have been distributed the organ will be drawn by the tickets being placed in a hat and taken out singly. The last number securing the prize. The organ is one of B. J. Coller's. This a novel way of drawing trade, and it is rumored that Bush & Swift will follow their example.

B. J. Coller was the guest of Peter Kishpaugh over Sunday.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The forest puts forth its green appearance rather slow.

Saturday was a cold windy disagreeable wintery day. Rain, snow, and hail being the order all day.

B. L. Baxter, of Battle Creek, was in our village Saturday.

Mr. Chas. Clark spent Saturday and Sunday with his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Clark.

W. H. Arner was in Detroit last week Thursday.

Adah Potter, of Tecumseh, was the guest of Miss Sena Corvell, Friday evening.

James Cole, of Colorado, formerly of Tecumseh, was the guest of Miss Allie Arner, Sunday.

Mrs. John Housman is not enjoying very good health at present.

Miss Rhoda Arner was home for a few days sick with a heavy cold, but is better at this writing.

Louis Priest went to Detroit Monday in search of employment.

To Mr. and Mrs. Burt Morley, a boy. All doing well.

Quarterly meeting next Sunday at the M. E. Church.

The public entertainment given by the literary society, assisted by the Britton band, last Friday evening met the expectations of all and was considered a success in every way. Proceeds $26. The dialogue "The Irish Linen peddler" was well rendered and brought the house down. The Britton band did themselves much credit, doing much better than was expected, upon their first appearance in public. If the boys continue their practice they will surely become one of the best bands in these parts. We want to hear you again, boys.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A rainstorm and Episcopal Convocation accompanied each other to town; and it was fortunate the latter was of numbers to form an appreciable addition to the congregation: the former kept more at home, than it tempted forth to hear sermons. There was no class for confirmation either last summer or last week, on account of spiritual growth having branched in some other direction. Cold weather nips conscience worse than repentance at present; even the rink suffers from that blight of all good projects called indifference. A slight weight of care balances trade; emigrants are mostly of the kind that have to be named before their nationality can be determined and everything but fault-finding is in the Chrysalis.

Mr. H. Stacy, who has long been one of the leading Spiritualists of Michigan, has gone from among us. He was a student of nature and theology till the hour of his death, and lived an industrious, blameless life, fearing neither the shadows of this world or the unknown, beyond it.

BRITTON BUDGET.

There is trouble and misunderstanding in Post office circles. Two appointments for one office. Edgar Wells and E. C. Rauch being the contesting parties.

In spite of factional feeling our school house is an assured fact. The work has commenced, the trenches for the wall are filled and carpenters busily engaged.

Rev. James Wright, the new minister at the Christian Church, has arrived and so far promises to give satisfaction.

Just at present Britton is a stirring place. The sound of the hammer and saw is heard on every side. The prediction of spring time seems to be fulfilled. John Britton's new house is being rapidly pushed along. Our new hotel, with John Exelby for host, is approaching completion. Wm. Nivison is erecting a new residence, while the foundation of the village M. D. is being finished. Verily Britton boometh.

J. P. Beckley, our hardware man, has got his stock on hand and his beaming face greets you with a jovial story or smile. Call and see him. He means business.

The G. A. R. of Britton is to celebrate on May 30th. Let all turn out and assist in honoring our brave boys who fell in a good cause.

A Service of Song—"John Tregenoweth-his mark" will be given next Sunday evening at the Congregational church, Tipton, to commence at 7:30. The consecutive readings by the Pastor, the music by the choir assisted by friends. This is a Temperance Story taken from one of the books written by Mark Guy Pearse, a leading minister in the English Wesleyan Methodis Conference.

The Jasper physician has got the mumps.

LENAWEE COUNTY HORTICULTURISTS.

The Lenawee county Horticultural society met as per adjournment; President Woodward in the chair. The secretary being absent, D. G. Edmiston was appointed secretary pro tem.

The day being very unfavorable, the attendance was small and the meeting was rather informal in character.

The first part of the meeting was devoted to questions and answers as follows:

Question 1.—Mr. Hough asked if it was too late to set strawberry plants. Helme, Ediston and others thought the present as good a time as earlier.

Question 2.—Mr. Crane asked, when is the best time to set ever green trees. The spring was preferred by all present and as early as the soil is in good working condition, though they may be set successfully later in the spring than desiduous trees as they do not start into growth so early.

Question 3.—Should the branches of evergreens be trimmed or shortened in at time of transplanting the same as desiduous trees?

Mr. Ediston said it was not necessary though it might be done if desirable.

Question 4.—Mr. Hough asked how deep Black cap raspberry plants should be planted?

Mr. Helme thought that it was best to set pretty deep. Others thought they should not be set more than three or four inches deep and that care should be taken not to cover the bud too deep.

The subject of strawberries and other small fruits came next in order.

Mr. Helme recommended Manchester as profitable for one crop only from one setting. He also thought well of Sharpless, as being of large size, good quality, etc.

Mr. Wickham recommended Manchester as being the best on his place.

Mr. Woodward recommended Bid well if the soil is good.

Mr. Edmiston had tried the James Vick and thought it gave promise of productiveness and fair quality, but hardly equal to the puff with which it was sent out.

Green prolific was well spoken of by several parties. Edmiston and Coller thought well of the Crescent seedling for early and Glendale for late. The Mt. Vernon was also a good late variety

Blackberries were not in order. Snyder and Taylor were reported by several as being in good condition after the late severe winter. The fruit of these varieties is not quite equal in size or quality to the Kittatiny or Lawton, but the two latter will be killed down whenever the peach buds are killed. Mr. Edmiston reported the stones hardy; as being injured; had not fruited it yet.

A question was raised as to the merits of the Dewberry, which was being advertised by certain dealers and offered by agents. Mr. Edmiston said when anybody offers you Dew-berries pass them on as quick as possible. It has but one merit. One plant will stock an 80 acre farm in a remarkably short time. Would rather have Canada thistles by odds.

A devise for protecting fruit trees against the ravages of the curculio, codling moth, etc., which is being offered to farmers and fruit growers of the country, was described and discussed at some length. Some thought it was of no value, while others thought it would do no harm to give it a trial so long as it was inexpensive and no contract was to be signed; but the statement that the curculio and other injurious insects could not fly caused a smile to pass around amongst those who are familiar with them.

The next meeting will be held at Clinton during the strawberry season. Notice of the time for the next meeting will be given through the papers, and to members by cards as usual. Society adjourned.

The Saline Observer has these comments about their new mineral well scheme:

The mineral well project is being considered by our capitalists, and we now feel able to say that it is almost a certainty. Mr. Bennett refuses to take $1,000 in a stock company, but has offered to put that much in the enterprise provided the citizens would give him a bonus of $1,700. This there seems to be no inclination on the part of the people to do, therefore, in all probability, the money will have to be subscribed in stock, which will be altogether the best and most satisfactory method. We believe, after investigating the subject, that the necessary funds can be easily raised in stock worth a proper organization, and sufficient protection furnished stockholders, and if Mr. Nims proposition is accepted this will be done, as the well is to be completed before a cent of money is paid to him. Let our people investigate the matter, and act upon their best judgment, and we have no fears of the accomplishment of the enterprise, with all its attendant benefits.

THE CHARGE AGAINST DR. FERGUSON.

Last week Dr. Geo. Ferguson the druggist was arraigned before Justice Burridge on complaint of John Hibbard for selling liquor without a license. The charge against him is that he failed to keep a record of sales, as the law requires of a druggist, and that he had not filed with the Common Council the bond required by law.

The Doctor was arraigned before Justice Burridge last Friday, and bound over with bail at $500 to appear at the next term of the Circuit Court for trial. Prosecutor Salsbury attended the case in behalf of the people.

As this seems to be an unfortunate affair, to say the least, we shall not be hasty, either to condemn or to exonerate the accused. Knowing that there are generally two sides to such questions, we have prefered to wait for the evidence before expressing any decided opinion. The facts claimed by the prosecution are stated above.

The Doctor, as we are informed, states frankly that he kept the required record, until in the winter while the store was being repaired, the book got laid aside and it has since been neglected; that there was no criminal intent on his part, and whatever penalty attaches to the neglect, ought not to subject him to being singled out from the great mass of dealers in the state, who are known only to keep this record spasmodically.

In regard to selling without a license the Doctor states that he supposed blanks would be furnished for that purpose, and when he found out that such was not the case he went to Mr. Wood's office to engage him to draw up a bond. Owing to Mr. Wood's absence from home on business the execution of the bond had been delayed. Although his old bond had expired he supposed and still believes that his application to the Recorder for a bond was a declaration which legally entitled him to continue selling. Some nice points are involved in the case and people will await the final issue with considerable interest. To what extent will a technical neglect of the provisions of the liquor law subject a man to penalty, when no criminal intent is proven?

Hudson Post: Last week A. J. Webster, an attorney from Elyria, Ohio, put in an appearance at this place for the purpose of attempting the collection of a note against Bohemian Oat Warner. The most plainly visible manner of collecting seemed to be the attachment of Mr. Warner's team, but before the necessary steps could be taken, Warner and team could not be found. Mr. Webster was pretty thoroughly acquainted with the workings of the oat scheme, Mr. Warner and his partners having for the past few years operated in the section about Elyria. He denounced the whole business as a most ingenious sort of a fraud, and that farmers in Ohio had been terribly swindled. He has been employed as council in cases where suit has been brought against farmers who had given notes for oats to speculate with, and who had refused to pay the notes because the Bohemian oat company had failed to fulfil their contract. When they operated in Ohio the president of the company was represented to be in Canada. In Ohio they have sowed their oats, reaped their oats, and are now threshing them, the lawyers getting what little substance there is left, and the farmers being compelled to put up with the chaff. The question which now interests many, is whether Bohemian oat men are more honest in Michigan than in Ohio?

The Hudson Gazette has this item about our townsman John R. Clark:

The popular lecturer, John R. Clark spoke at the Methodist church to a large congregation on Sunday evening and about 200 on Monday. His subject the first evening, "Among the Masses," was admirably handled, and as a temperance discourse was the finest delivered in Hudson for some time. Mr. Clark spoke on this question from a moral standpoint. On Monday evening, according to announcement, he gave his lecture, "To-and-Fro in London." It was full of historical research and eulogies on prominent literary and public men, descriptions of noted buildings, and humorous recitations—all suggested by travel to-and-fro in the great metropolis of the world. Mr. Clark was born in London and passed his boyhood days in knocking about the streets as newsboy and bootblack. He knows a good deal about the "cruel lights of London town," and has a unique and most interesting way of imparting it to his audience. If he should visit Hudson again he will draw a much larger house.

The Hudson Gazette is too modest. It says: "The Tecumseh Herald longs for a circus. You ask too much all at once, Bro. Stacy. An organ grinder will do us very well for a starter."

MY STOUT OLD HEART AND I.

My stout old heart and I are friends,
Two Bavarian friends together;
Nor daily wars, nor daily blows,
Have called out our white feather.
We've rested till the campaign ends—
For calm or stormy weather.

My stout old heart and I have been Through serious scenes of trouble.
We've been denied, our hopes have died;
Our loads have been more than double.
And yet we've cried, "And we have seen
Some griefs in life's bubble."

My stout old heart and I have fought
Some bitter fights to endings;
And if or not we've victory got,
We're not been hurt past mending!
The wounds are all in front we've caught,
And easier for the mending.

My stout old heart and I, you see,
We understand each other.
—Old comrade true, my hand to you!
On honor, tell me whether You're daunted yet—"To arms!" "beats" a
"Retreat is for another!"

Eyes right! Guide center! Forward march!
Dress where the colors fly.
—Six feet of grandest triumph's arch—
My stout old heart and I!

DUPLICITY PUNISHED.

"It Was Love as Did It"—A True Incident of Lowly Life.

Hannah, or "Hanner"—as she is generally spoken of in the circles in which she moves—Hodges is a cook in a pleasant house in the Fifth Ward. A most excellent cook is Hannah. She has no widowed mother who keeps a boarding house to supply with provisions, and consequently her employer gets on comfortably on a very moderate income. Neither does she cherish a cat which breaks things, and her male friends are never regaled with anything but cold roast that is actually unfit to again go on the table. Hannah is a model cook so far as culinary skill, cleanliness and management go.

And then she is tolerably good-looking. She has a broad, red face, and weighs perhaps one hundred and eighty pounds, and may be considered by critical folk somewhat too red and robust in the matter of arm, and her hair may be a trifle too thin, but a vast army of truckmen and cab drivers and servants in the houses thereabouts, do not consider these little matters as drawbacks. Possibly the rumor that she has, in a long course of earning wages and husbanding perquisites, saved one thousand dollars, somewhat mitigates the general severity of her appearance, and lends a charm to her which mere beauty, never more than skin deep, can not give. One thousand dollars is not a very large sum of money to a banker or a wholesale merchant, but to a hack driver, ambitious to swindle on his own account instead of doing it for another, it is a great deal. It means a hack of his own and luxury. Likewise a truckman who pants to own his own establishment does not consider a thousand dollars a matter to be lightly considered.

Two men, both truckmen, essayed the fair Hannah, and sought her hand in marriage, which is honorable. One was Seth Strawn and the other Henry Petter. Hannah treated them both well, and sat before them, with rigid impartiality, portions of cold beef precisely alike. They never came the same night, or if they did she was not at home to the last comer. They were both aware that they were both hated rivals, they each knew that the other was an aspirant for the hand of the maiden, and they hated each other as cordially as two men can hate. Men may compete in business and still be friendly. Generals may contend on bloody fields and love each other, but he who encounters another in the lists of love must necessarily hate him. Why it is so, is a conundrum.

Both had proposed to her, and both had urged her to be his. She liked them both, and had told each that she would be willing to marry them, only—

Only what?

One evening she had them both together, and she explained from what her hesitation sprang. She informed them that they were mere employed truckmen, and that their wages were about one dollar and twenty-five cents a day, or possibly less. With a sigh they assented by bowing their heads, but Mr. Strawn remarked that it would probably be better as soon as the times got better. Very good. But it would make no difference, as the price of beer would go up correspondingly with the betterment of the times. She would say nothing of her savings, which might or might not be large; but one thing she had determined to never do—she would not marry except it gave her independence. Her mother made the fatal mistake of wedding a man who was a journeyman shoemaker in London, and the result was that she (Hannah) was a cook, instead of dwelling in gilded halls. She did not wish to rise at once above her present station, she should put on no airs, she should cook her husband's meals and mend his clothes, and make her own, but he must at least have the means in hand, when she married him, to enable him to rise.

"In short, gentlemen," she continued, "this is my decision. The man who 'as my 'art, and consekently, my 'and, must hown 'is hown truck, and be a Join' bisnis on 'is hown haccount. Vich of you does this first may come and claim me."

Mr. Henry Petter sank back and groaned. He remarked that it would take an eternity for him to get a truck, and he bid her a tearful farewell forever, and retired. An idea, probably inspired by a stern determination to handle the one thousand dollars of which she was the reputed possessor, occurred to Mr. Strawn, and he seized her hand:

"Hannah," he exclaimed, "wait for me. You shall have me, and a truck, ere two days have passed over your head."

The next day a small street boy knocked at the area door and Hannah was requested to step out. She did so, and there in the street, before the house, was an elegant truck with two enormous horses, and on the truck in an attitude of triumph, stood Samuel, holding the reins.

"Mine!" he said. "Mine! Ha! ha! ha! I will be around to-night and take you to my sister's, where we will be married. Mine!"

In a delirium of joy, Hannah made her preparations. If the kitchen was not run as quite as good principles as usual, it was due entirely to the fact that the girl's mind was in a chaotic condition. To be the wife of a man who owned such a truck and such a pair of horses, was enough to upset the mind of any well regulated cook in Christendom.

That night at the humble dwelling of Samuel's sister, they were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. For the immediate present it was agreed that Hannah should retain her place, at least until Samuel could make arrangements for an establishment on top of a tenement house, of their own.

* * * * * * *

Two days passed, Samuel spending the evenings with his wife in the comfortable kitchen. It was happiness for him to sit on her knee, with love in his heart and a corned-beef sandwich in his hand. He wished that it might be always thus, for his cup of happiness was full.

"Sammy, my dear, 'ow is bisnis?"

A cloud passed over Samuel's brow, and the mouthful of sandwich almost strangled him.

"Hannah, darlin', forgive me. It was love as did it! Love for you, dear, love for you!"

"Did what, Sammy?"

"Hannah, you must know it some time, and you may as well know it now. Ha'nt got no truck!"

"No truck?"

"Nary truck nor nary hoss. That establishment I borrowed for effect. But it was love that did it, and then I said to myself she will forgive me, and she will let me take her thousand dollars out of the savings bank, and I will get a truck, and we will be happy yet."

A subdued sigh, a relaxation of limb, and there was a hundred and eighty pounds of girl fainting on the floor. Samuel dashed water in her face, and she slowly revived.

"Samuel, we are miserable people. You 'ave no truck—I 'ave no thousand dollars—I 'aven't a cent!"

At first he was indignant at being deceived as to her financial condition, and then she was indignant at his deception in the matter of the truck. There was some hair on the floor, and Samuel stood for some minutes over the kitchen sink stopping the flow of blood from his nose; but finally, after passion had subsided and the situation was fully and fairly considered, they made it up and renewed their vows of eternal love and constancy.

The pair are rubbing along as best as they can. Mrs. Strawn, under her maiden name, is still cook, and Samuel is still working for his old employers. But they have quit the vanities of this life—Samuel beer, and Hannah ribbons—and they hope to save enough to produce at least a one-horse truck.

There is no especial moral to this, for there is no catastrophe. It is probably better for them that they have to shift, with nothing to begin with; for when they have earned and saved a fortune they will appreciate it.—Toledo Blade.

"JOHN."

A Monosyllable Name Which Has Been Prolific of Derivations.

As a family name it is sometimes found as a plain John, then as St. John, and then its first changes is into Johns, then comes Jones, Johnson, Johncock, Jonkins, Jenkens, Jennings, Jenkinson, Jenks, Jinks and Jinkinson. By additions we have Littlejohn, Brownjohn and Properjohn. No argument is needed to prove the popularity of Jack. As a nickname it is fixed beyond all fear of abolition, and from a nickname it passed by easy stages to a reputable place among the family names. Jack is not very common, but Jacks is more frequent, and Jackson no longer excites remark. We have little idea how wonderfully popular the name Jack used to be. "Everybody was Jack till he was found to be some one else, so that every man Jack of them was a common term for a crowd and its integral parts for ages. Every servant whose name or office happened to be unknown, went by the name of Jack, and thus an idea of utility was attached to the character of Jack, which, when articles of household use were one after another invented, came into play in giving them names also, and thus we have boot-jacks and black-jacks and smoke-jacks and jack-towels, together with Jacks for this, that and other purpose, until the name became so common as to be inconvenient. Then came an idea that Jack must be a cunning sort of fellow, and so the appelation gradually applied itself to the smarter of the animal kingdom, and thus came the jackdaw, the jack-an-apes and the jack-pike. But as familiarity is a potent breeder of contempt, the very commonness of the name threw it into disrepute as having something stupid about it, and we thus gained jack-fool or jack-pudding, or a buffoon, and jackass for a dolt. This is a sad fall for the name of the beloved disciple, but to such uses will a name sometimes come. It is curious to know that the name John became common in the western part of Europe only after the crusades, when the pilgrims to the Holy Land always carried as a part of their outfit a bottle designed to hold the water from the River Jordan brought home for baptismal purposes. The great forerunner of Christ came into public notice among the pilgrims, and it was probably more on his account than on that of the beloved disciple that the name assumed such a place in the popular regard.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

GEN. GRANT AND HIS HORSES.

Reminiscences by Coachman Hawkins—Two Famous Steeds.

Every one who knows General Grant is aware that he has always been an admirer of thoroughbred horses. When he first entered the White House as President of the United States, he owned over a hundred head of horses, which he kept at his farm near St. Louis. The foreman of the stables in which these horses were kept was Albert Hawkins, who is now coachman for President Cleveland. No one knows better than Albert how devoted General Grant was to horses, and some of his reminiscences on the subject of General Grant and his stock may not prove uninteresting reading at this time. Albert has been a public character long enough to know when and how to talk to newspaper reporters. Just at this time it is a difficult matter to obtain any information at the White House, from the President down to the stable hands. As General Grant is just now uppermost in the thoughts of the people of the whole world, Albert no doubt felt that he was at liberty to join in the discussion concerning his "old boss," as he terms General Grant. Albert says General Grant was an excellent judge of horseflesh. It was a difficult matter to deceive him in a horse trade, because he is familiar with all the points that are considered in examining them. He could look into a horse's mouth and tell his exact age within a few months. He always insisted that his horses should never be ill used, either in or out of the stable. They were given the best kind of feed, furnished with large, comfortable stalls and regularly exercised. Any man who was known to ill treat or misuse one of his horses was immediately dismissed. The General took a fancy to Albert because he was always kind and gentle in dealing with the stock under his charge. After the General became President he sold many of his horses in St. Louis, and directed Albert to come to Washington, and he attributes all his good fortune and continuous employment to the fact that he never ill used a dumb beast. The General's favorite horses were Cincinnati, Egypt and Jeff Davis. The former was as gentle as a lamb, and he knew and obeyed the General at all times and under all circumstances. Cincinnati was a good saddle horse, in addition to being a first class horse in harness. The General could ride him to any point in the city, jump off his back and leave him unhitched for any length of time. No matter how long the General remained away, when he returned Cincinnati was there waiting for him. He did not pay any attention to circus parades, and was not to be frightened by noise and confusion on the street. When the General directed him to stand and wait for him, Cincinnati would not bulge till the General had mounted him. During the General's second term in the White House, arrangements were made for an equestrian statue representing Grant mounted on his favorite war horse Cincinnati. Albert says he can not remember the name of the sculptor, but he recollects the circumstances. Every day for nearly a month the General would go down to the stable, have the bridle and saddle put on Cincinnati, and off he would go to meet the sculptor. On several occasions Albert accompanied him to a beautiful spot in the vicinity of the Soldiers' Home, where the cast was made, and General Grant frequently visited the Presidential stables, went into the stalls and talked to his horses just as though they were human beings and were capable of understanding every word he said to them. The Jeff Davis horse was a terrible kicker and biter and the stable hands were afraid to go near his stall. His feed had to be passed in to him from an adjoining stall. The General, however, had complete control over him, and he could enter his stall, handle him as he desired, and, in fact, do anything he wanted with him. Old Jeff knew his voice, for as soon as the General entered the stable he would throw back his ears and move around restlessly in his stall until the General showed him some attention. On several occasions the stable hands tried to deceive Jeff by imitating the General's voice, but as soon as he discovered the deception he made his heels play a lively tune on the side of his stall. Albert has remained at the White House during the administrations of Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur, and will probably be retained by Cleveland.—Washington Cor. Boston Herald.

The Torpedo.

A machine has just been patented which promises to render the torpedo still more effective. Hitherto there has always been a great element of uncertainty in the action of marine explosives, and not unfrequently they have completely falsified the calculations of those who have employed them. The torpedo has, indeed, sometimes proved more destructive to those who used it than to the enemy against whom it was directed. The new machine is called the "torpedo guide," and it is claimed that it can control, with absolute certainty, the action of the explosive at a distance of three miles. As the torpedo is launched on its errand of destruction a thin insulated wire is paid off, and, as the wire immediately sinks, communication can not be destroyed by the enemy. The operator controls the movements of the torpedo by transmitting a negative or positive current of electricity, and the "guide" is so constructed that the attack can be directed to any given point with mathematical precision. Even if the ship from which the torpedo proceeded were moving in one direction, and the vessel attacked in another, the torpedo could still be employed, it is stated, with deadly certainty.—*N. Y. A MARVELOUS STORY TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted; and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully,

PITH AND POINT.

—A silent partner is one who makes no noise and leaves nothing.

—Babies cry for the same reason that some men swear. It's because they don't know any better.—N. Y. Journal.

—The last symptom of the "lady" craze is in a recent advertisement in a New York paper, which says: "A young lady would like a position as Dish-Washer in a restaurant."

—A family in New York were poisoned by buckwheat cakes. There is nothing safe at present but fasting, and even that becomes dangerous after a certain length of time.—Troy Times.

—"The way to sleep," says a scientist, "is to think of nothing." When an editor wants to slumber all he has to do is to try and remember how much money he has in the world.—Boston Post.

—A "condensed" edition of Webster's dictionary is announced. This may improve the work without destroying the plot. We have always regarded the volume as too prolix.—Burlington Hawkeye.

—The fact that all the peach-blossoms have been killed and the fact that next summer we will have just as many peaches as ever lead to only one inference, and that is that peaches do not grow on peach-trees.—Boston Post.

—The Lawyers way:

Said Tom to Harry, "Can you tell
How lawyers do to dress so well?"
Said Harry, "Yes, they're so defiant,
To get a suit they strip their client."
Said Tom, "You're wrong, they closer nip him;
They first obtain the suit—then strip him."

—No one is ever killed by lightning when asleep in bed, according to the assertion of an English electrician. Whenever you hear a clap of thunder always go to bed and fall asleep immediately. This is a sure precaution.—N. Y. Graphic.

—"So Mr. Blank was here to-day?" Servant—"Yes, sir." "And you told him what I said, I suppose?" "Yes, sir." "Did he take umbrage?" "I didn't notice sir; but if he did, he'll bring it back. He's a very particular gentleman, you know!"—Boston Transcript.

—Young Lady (at hotel table)—Do you know that vulgar person at the adjoining table who is eating with his knife? Another Young Lady—Is it possible you don't know Mr. Smith, whose uncle has just died and left him a million dollars? Young Lady—No; is that he? How gracefully he handles his knife.—N. Y. Sun.

—Teacher—"Now, what do you understand by brain work?" Boy—"When a man works with his head." Teacher—"Correct. And what is manual labor?" Boy—"When a man works with his hands." Teacher—"That's right. To which of these classes do I belong when I teach you. What do I use most in teaching you?" Boy—"A strap."—Texas Siftings.

—"See here," said the managing editor, kindly, but firmly, to the young man who has just come to do the fires and dog-fights, and assume general charge of the entire paper; "you must be a little more careful in your grammar and spelling. You make too much trouble for the compositor and proof-reader. You say in this article he had went' and 'we have never saw.' Then you spell 'separate' with two ps and four es, and you say 'we have come to the conclution' and 'that we are horra-fide at the bear ideea.' Now, you must be more careful and'—— "Aw, well, look here, Shorty," cried the new young man, "give a fellow a chance. You got to remember I've been in college for eight years and haven't had a chance to learn anything." The managing editor forgave him, and promoted him to the carrier department.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

Lace and Tulle Bonnets.

French laces imitating real thread laces are used for making entire bonnets, and for partly trimming others. Wide scarfs or barbes of lace are doubled and have the edges gathered together across the top, and the closed part then forms the crown, while the lower edges are fulled in, and covered with a bandeau of jet in which are many pendent beads. This bandeau edges the front also, and flowers with loops of velvet or of watered ribbon form the high trimming, and the strings match the ribbon loops. Poppy red tulle of French crape and black lace make a stylish contrast in such bonnets. For instance, red tulle forms the lengthwise puffs of a bonnet, mounted on a transparent foundation of wires, bordered with jet drop trimming, and finished on top with a jet butterfly of mammoth size resting on a lace bow; the strings are poppy red velvet ribbon two inches wide. Similar bonnets are trimmed in front with puffs of French crape of the brilliant coquelicot red, and still others have black piece-lace mounted on a red foundation. Cresson green watered ribbons are also used on black lace bonnets by fashionable French milliners. Gold galloon in many loops is laid over the brim of black lace bonnets, while still others have a combination of gilt lace with French lace like that in favor last autumn.—Harper's Bazar.

—While the ice carnival may bring fish to the net of Montreal, it is not popular with the other cities in Canada. The Sarnia Canadian declares that Americans in general, through hearing of nothing save snow-shoes, toboggans and ice palaces, get the idea that Ontario is a "frozen-up country," with nine months of winter. "Not one out of a hundred of the people of Ontario," says the Canadian, "knows what a toboggan is like, and not one out of a thousand uses snowshoes."

—The skating craze attains its highest development in the country. City people have little idea of it. A Vermont clergyman, in a recent address, expressed the idea that a moderate use of the rink was well enough for children, but he said he had known of instances in which men had left their work, farmers even in their busy season and gone in their overalls to the skating rink.—N. Y. Sun.

A New Orleans paper refers editorially to the wonderful restoration to health of Mr. T. Posey, druggist, 225 Canal street, that city, who some time ago was prostrated by an excruciating attack of sciatica. After much suffering his wife applied St. Jacob's Oil, which cured him promptly and entirely.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

The "constantly tired-out" feeling so often experienced is the result of impoverished blood, and consequent enfeebled vatality. Ayer's Sarsaparilla feeds and enriches the blood, increases the appetite, and promotes digestion of the food, and the assimilation of its strengthening qualities. The system being thus invigorated, the feeling rapidly changes to a grateful sense of strength and energy.

"Mothers Should Note This."

Under this caption an old physician writes to a Cincinnati Medical Journal, that in view of the fact that people living at a distance from cities are frequently obliged to resort to cough mixtures already put up for use, they should provide themselves with only such remedies as are known to be free from opiates, poisons and narcotics; thus avoiding not only danger, but even fatal results. He recommends the recently discovered Red Star Cough Cure which analyses and tests by various Boards of Health proved to be purely vegitable as well as prompt, effective and entirely harmless.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 14, 1885.

As an artful dodger, Johnny Bull takes the cake.

Buffalo is remarkably modest. Although that city is President Cleveland's home, it has neither asked nor received any office as yet.

Gov. Alger has vetoed the minority representation bill in the interest of the corporations to which he owes his election. All right. The people will veto him, in case he should conclude to stand for re-election.

O. B. Griggs of Plainfield, Ind. is a very polite as well as grateful man. He published a card in the local paper tendering his sincere thanks to the choir of Plainfield who so kindly and satisfactorily sang at the funeral of his mother-in law.

The money in the United States treasury vaults has all been counted and a deficiency of only two cents discovered. A big search for three missing dollars was made and these were discovered where they had rolled from a broken package.

The New York World has abundant reason to congratulate itself upon its marvelous success in working up the popular subscriptions to the Bartholdi pedestal fund. The sum already received has almost reached $50,000. The World is a great newspaper.

An exchange says: Secretary Bayard gives out that he doesn't read the newspapers and doesn't care what they say about him or his administration of affairs. We thought something had gone wrong with the man even before we heard what it was. That was formerly the boast of Ben Butler, and he some time since found out that it was poor policy for a public man to defy public opinion.

Prof. Sumner, of Yale College says: Protection drives capital out of those industries which do pay into those which don't. Can we get rich by taxing each other? Can we increase prosperity by scalping each other. That's the whole question. Suppose, now we are all here, we lock the doors and begin to peacefully swap watches, jewelry and money, or to plunder each other: how much better off shall we be to-morrow morning unless somebody comes in with more money? Protection sets A to work and helps B to live on him.

Hon. J. K. Boies, of Hudson, writes a very readable Florida letter, in which he speaks of the liquor laws there as follows: "The laws here require a man desiring to engage in the liquor traffic to present to the county commissioners a petition signed by a majority of the registered voters in the township or ward where he proposes to sell. He must then pay a state tax of $500, a county tax of $250, and such municipal tax as the township or village or city boards shall determine. The result is that the traffic is very much limited and restricted, and confined almost entirely to the large towns."

The appointment of Geo. V. N. Lothrop, of Detroit, as minister to Russia, brings home to the Democrats of Michigan in a most emphatic manner, the theory on which the President's appointments have nearly all been made. In making his selections he strives to choose men of high character and integrity and peculiar fitness for the trust bestowed, rather than professional politicians. Mr. Lothrop's appointment is conceded by all who know the man to be a peculiarly happy one. He is not only the leader of the Michigan bar, but a man of ripe scholarship and a successful man of affairs. And yet it is safe to say that five sixths of the voters of New York state never heard of the man, and the small potato office seekers of New York might well ask themselves "Who is the new minister to Russia, any way?" These United States have grown to be quite a sizable country, and there are a great many good and able men residing therein. The fact that an appointee to an important office does not enjoy the national reputation of a Hendricks or a McClellan, is no proof that he is unfitted for his post. It is a significant fact that, with a few minor exceptions, nearly every appointment thus far made by President Cleveland has been just as enthusiastically endorsed by the state in which the appointee resides, as Mr. Lothrop's appointment has been by the citizens of Michigan.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT, MAY 1, 1885.

For this report returns have been received from 870 correspondents representing 663 townships. Five hundred and ninety four of the returns are from 408 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

At Lansing the average temperature during April was 43.97°F. The average for the same month in 1884 was 47.30 degrees, in 1883, 46 degrees, and in 1882, 45 degrees. The highest temperature recorded was on the 23d, 80 degrees, and the lowest on the 4th and 13th, 23 degrees. Four and one half inches of snow fell on the 11th, and four inches on the 15th, and about one and one half inches of rain fell during the month.

The estimates of correspondents show the condition of the wheat crop in the southern four tiers of counties to be 104 per cent, and in the counties north of the southern four tiers, 99 per cent of condition one year ago. Compared with vitality and growth of average years, the condition in the southern counties is 101 per cent, and in the northern counties 98 per cent. These figures indicate an aggregate product of 24,872,962 bushels. With favorable weather until harvest, it is believed the yield is more likely to exceed than to fall below this amount. The number of acres in wheat is about five per cent less than in 1884, but of the area seeded not more than one per cent will be plowed up because winter killed or otherwise destroyed. The loss from winter killing of small patches on knolls and other exposed places is not greater than usual.

Concerning the condition of the growing wheat crop in the United States, we take the following from April report of the United States Department of Agriculture: "The present condition of wheat, as reported, is worse than in 1883. It is 77 per cent against 96 last year and 89 in 1883. In 1881, the year of lowest recent rate of yield, the condition April 1 was 85, and serious loss was sustained afterwards. The real status of the crop will be better shown a month hence, when the vitality of the roots has been demonstrated and the character of the spring determined. On the present showing, the reduction of yield on the basis of last year's production promises to be more than 50,000,000 bushels from winter-killing and low vitality, in addition to the loss from diminished breadth. Whether the crop will exceed 400,000,000 bushels or fall short of it depends upon the reliability of present appearances and on future conditions affecting growth and ripening."

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of April at 163 elevators and mills. Of these 147 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is 31 per cent of the whole number of elevators and mills in these counties. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 256,708, of which 139,309 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties; 84,610 bushels in the second tier; 30,944 bushels in the third tier; 16,420 bushels in the fourth tier, and 5,425 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. At 23 elevators and mills, or 14 per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, there was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels reported marketed in nine months, August—April, is 7,427,164. This is 30 per cent of the crop of 1884. In May, 1884, 35 per cent of the 1883 crop had been reported marketed. Six per cent of the area in clover has been winter-killed. Clover not winter-killed is 96 per cent of condition May 1, 1884. In condition, horses are 97, cattle 92, sheep 92, and swine 96, 100 representing stock in good, healthy and thrifty condition. Apples promise 68 per cent of an average crop. One year ago we published a compilation of the statements of correspondents in the southern four tiers of counties relative to the condition of wheat and other crops. We omit such compilation this month because the statements of the different correspondents in the several counties are so nearly alike it seems useless to repeat them. As a rule, wheat is reported in good condition, the exception being, of course, that on high knolls, side hills and low ground. The roots of many pieces that looked brown on the first of the month are believed to be alive. A number of correspondents believe that the yield per acre will exceed the yield in 1884, while others state that the prospect for a good crop is better than for a number of years.

THE DEFEAT OF MR. JUSTICE COOLEY.

The American bar have learned with pain that one of the greatest jurists which this country ever produced has just been defeated of a re-election to the Supreme Bench of his own State, though in the full strength of his powers and at the very height of his usefulness. Thomas M. Cooley as a constitutional lawyer takes rank by the side of Story and Marshall. As a writer on constitutional law he is superior to Story, because he is more accurate, less diffuse and not as vain of a display of learning. His legal judgments surpass those of Story in brevity and diction. They equal those of Marshall in diction and massive reasoning and greatly surpass them in learning. No judge has ever lived in this country possessing a more enlightened spirit of justice or a more evenly balanced judicial mind. His work on Torts is the finest epitome of the law on that subject which has ever been written in the English language. His labors as lecturer in the law school of the University of Michigan have given him a personal acquaintance with the members of the bar in every section of the Union. Through his labors as an instructor, an author and a judge he has acquired a hold upon the good opinions of his professional brethern such as is probably enjoyed by no other living lawyer.—Central Law Journal.

THE NEW DRAIN LAW.

We condense from the Evening News the following relative to the new drain law, a matter in which the residents of Raisin, Ridgeway and Macon are considerably interested:

The present law provides, in case of drains traversing more than one county, that the judge of probate of either county shall appoint a special commissioner to construct such drain. This has invariably proved a failure. The bill provides that such drains shall be constructed under the joint supervision of the drain commissioners of the several counties affected by such drain. The present law provides that the board of supervisors of each county may appoint a drain commissioner. The bill makes it their duty to do so. The election of township drain commissioners every two years is not changed in the bill. The present law compels the commissioner to assess all the drain taxes in one year; but the bill gives the commissioner the right to spread it over two years in his discretion, but all expenses incurred previous to the letting of contracts must be paid out of the first year's assessments. The present law is defective as to the manner of returning and collecting delinquent drain taxes, which is corrected in the bill by providing that such taxes shall be returned and returned like all other taxes. The bill makes it the duty of the commissioner to report to the township clerk of each township in which lands benefited by the drains are located, the amount assessed upon the township for public benefit and the amount of the assessment for benefits on each description on the last Wednesday of September of each year, and such clerk makes a certified statement of the same to the supervisor before the first day of October. The present law provides that the commissioner shall construct bridges wherever any drain crosses an enclosed field. The bill strikes this out as expensive and unnecessary, but when the drain crosses a highway it makes it the duty of the highway commissioner to construct a bridge. The bill gives the drain commissioner the right and power to administer oaths and take acknowledgements of release of right of way. It also limits the jurisdiction of the township drain commissioner to cases where the beginning, entire course and terminus of the drain are within the township, and where the lands to be assessed for benefits are within such township. County drain commissioners have concurrent jurisdiction with the township commissioners in cases where the drain is located in one township, and exclusive jurisdiction in all cases where it traverses more than one township. In all cases the bill has been made to conform with supreme court decisions in former drain laws. The present bill is clearly worded, each provision logically succeeding the other. It is more than likely that the farmers of Michigan will regard this bill, if it passes the legislature, as the best ever enacted in this or any other state.

THE NEW MINISTER TO RUSSIA.

The appointment of George V. N. Lothrop of Detroit as minister to Russia is received with the greatest satisfaction wherever Mr. Lothrop is known. We clip the following biographical sketch from the Evening News:

The news of yesterday concerning Hon. Geo. V. N. Lothrop's appointment as minister to Russia is received with the greatest delight by the Michigan democracy. The following sketch of Mr. Lothrop is from the Detroit News:

George Van Ness Lothrop was born at Easton, Bristol county, Conn., Aug. 8, 1817. His early years were spent on his father's farm. Graduating from Brown university in 1838 he entered the law school of Harvard university, but in 1839 he removed on account of ill health to Prairie Ronde, Kalamazoo county, Michigan, where his brother, Hon. Edwin H. Lothrop, had a large farm. After restoring his health he came to Detroit in '43, and resumed the study of law, beginning practice in '44 as a partner of D. Bethune Duffield, under the firm name of Lothrop & Duffield, which continued until 1856. In April, 1848, he was appointed attorney-general of the state, and held the office until January 1851. Some excitement occurred about this time in consequence of a real or supposed purpose of the Roman catholics in Detroit to secure a portion of the school funds for the benefit of their schools. Mr. Lothrop enlisted earnestly in a popular movement to counteract the scheme, and was elected recorder on an independent citizen's ticket. He has two or three times received the complimentary vote of the democratic members of the state legislature for United States senator. He was a member of the state constitutional convention of 1867. For 25 years he was general attorney of the Michigan Central railroad.

From the time of his entrance upon actual professional life Mr. Lothrop has enjoyed a wide celebrity throughout Michigan as a lawyer and politician, and a cultured, courteous, and popular gentleman of the old school. For many years he has been considered the most prominent lawyer and orator of Michigan, and the fact was tacitly recognized that if the democratic party ever came into power he would be given one of the best positions. Mr. Lothrop led the Michigan delegation at Charleston national convention in 1860, and really headed the Douglas sentiment in that body. During the war he gave a cordial support to all just and necessary measures of the government. Mr. Lothrop is prominent in social and literary circles, and one of the prominent figures in the project for a museum of art in the city.

The Bohemian oats gang, which has been swindling many farmers in this and surrounding counties, found their match in a man named Hogue, who resides near Enterprise. He took an agency and was furnished 200 bushels of the stuff. When the general agent called on him to ascertain his success as an agent, he learned to his loss, that Hogue had fed the 200 bushels to his stock, as he said "just to see the improvement over the old fashioned oats." A law suit will follow.

Rev. W. H. Babbitt, pastor of the Presbyterian church will deliver the third Anniversery sermon of his ministry in Tecumseh next sabbath morning. Members of the church and congregation will all be present, it is hoped. An invitation is extended to all the scholars of the Sunday School to be present also.

E. G. Cook has been making some important repairs and improvements upon his family residence which will greatly add to its convenience and comfort. A portico has been extended along the east side of the upright part of the house. A large bay window has been placed in the vestibule, opening out upon the new portico. The room in the rear of the vestibule has been enlarged into a fine family room, with a bath adjoining it, at the north east corner. The new rooms and vestibule will be handsomely decorated with wall and ceiling decorations. Mr. Cook is always making improvements of some kind, for he believes in enjoying life.

Arbor day was but little observed in Michigan. This is to be regretted. Our forests are being destroyed with a reckless extravagance that will bring its own punishment in the course of time. Statistics show that the destruction of the forests of the country from fires alone amounts to upwards of $20,000,000 annually. Every year there is upwards of 30,000,000 fine trees destroyed by railways to be made into ties. Millions of acres of forest are wiped out annually to be converted into lumber for building purposes. But little process of reparation thus far has been made. In a few States of the Union tree planting is beginning to be observed. But it is not at all commensurate with the destruction going on. It is but a drop in the bucket. We destroy, but do not repair. We cut down, but do not replant. Thus the soil is shorn of its fertility, droughts are more frequent and floods are on the increase. It is time to turn over a new leaf—to look carefully to the preservation of what forest yet remains to us, and to renew by annual planting, by cutting understandingly, and with wisdom and judgment have some regard for the future.

GETTING READY FOR BUSINESS.

A green looking stripling, about six feet tall and as corpulent as a bean pole, sauntered into Satterthwaite's hardware store the other day and propounded to "Boley" a few questions:

"D'ye keep stope pipe fer sale here, mister?"

"Yes, sir, we have all kinds of stove pipe."

"D'ye keep milk pans and slap-jack griddles, and cookin' truck ginrally?"

"Of course, that is in our line."

"And knives and forks and dishpans and spittoons and rattle boxes?"

"Yes, sir."

"D'ye sell on trust?"

"That depends on the customer. When we strike a good looking man like you we are disposed to accommodate."

"Wall, I'll make out a list. The fact is I went to see Sal last Sunday evening, and afore tearin myself away I popped the question. Sal was awfully flustrated, and wanted four weeks to consider, but she whispered in my ear as I kissed her good night, that she'd say "yes" when the four weeks was up. So I thought as how I'd better be looking up some kitchin truck and be gittin ready for bizness."

A few hours before the time appointed for the nuptials, Sheriff Whitmore received a telegram stating that the reverend gentleman had a wife and children living in Jackson. The wedding has been indefinitely postponed.

The Ohio Farmer has been giving prizes for the best essays on different farm topics. Six essays on market gardening were presented, among which was one from Abner Wilson of this village. The committee on examination decided his to be the best essay of the six and awarded him the first prize of $15,00. Mr. Wilson is not only an excellent scholar but is thoroughly posted upon that specialty, and consequently his essays are well worth reading.

Morenci Observer: About 4 o'clock one morning of this week it was discovered that smoke was filling Postmaster Cottrell's house, and a hasty investigation showed that the cause was a nice blaze just starting up down cellar in the incubator with which the asst. postmaster has of late been experimenting. The timely discovery prevented much damage being done, but that machine has been moved where it will not "incubate" another dangerous fire.

The committee of the G. A. R. having in charge the arrangements for Decoration Day held a meeting Monday evening and blocked out a program of exercises. A few special committees are yet to be appointed, and the program in full will be presented in the HERALD of next week. We can assure our readers however, that the arrangements are nearly completed, and that a better program has never been presented in Tecumseh than will be given this year. The committee have done their part faithfully, and if good weather shall be vouchsafed to us, the celebration will be a grand success.

Prof. Bailey's Astronomical lecture last Tuesday evening was listened to by a rather small but highly delighted audience. By the aid of the Cosmosphere he was enabled to make many of the intricacies of astronomy plain to all, and those who might have attended and remained away missed an evening of instruction and enjoyment. The Post made a mistake in not getting a nigger show. A third rate nigger show would have filled the Opera House, from the orchestra chairs to the back gallery. We are pleased to learn however that the net receipts of the entertainment were about $30. They should have been double that sum.

The entertainment given by Prof. Morris at the Opera House last Thursday evening attracted a good audience. The tricks of his trained dogs are something wonderful, and some of them showed almost human intelligence. The audience was made up largely of children who enjoyed the fun immensely.

The Chicago Herald completed the fourth year of its existance last Sunday. It is a remarkably precocious child for one of its age. Complete in its news, able in its editorials, perfect in its mechanical make-up and typography, it already takes the lead among the cheap dailies of the Western metropolis.

C. J. Brewer, accompanied by his brother Albert, left for the Arkansas Hot Springs Tuesday afternoon. He intended to go last week but was delayed a few days to arrange his business affairs. We sincerely hope he may find a few weeks sojourn there beneficial to him and may return with his health fully restored.

Sarah E. Round's Readings at the Baptist church last Friday evening were listened to by a good audience to the satisfaction of all. Her selections were all finely rendered. The program was interspersed with vocal and instrumental music by home talent. The Library Fund was replenished to the amount of $10.70.

The Balch postoffice is in rather a mixed condition. First the announcement was made that Edgar R. Wells had been appointed postmaster. Then the word came that Edward C. Rauch was the lucky man. Now we understand that Mr. Rauch has sold his business and intends to remove to Monroe. But the riddle will soon be solved and Mr. Wells will probably be the custodian of Uncle Sam's mail at Balch.

Adrian Press: It is said that the new medical pension board will retain Dr. Reynolds, and that Dr. Hull and Dr. Todd, both of this city, will be the other members. Old soldiers will receive square treatment at their hands. We cannot say a word against either member, but we think perhaps one physician from outside the city should have been on the board. Possibly the reduction in fees one half, makes the place undesirable for a physician who has to be to the expense of getting to the city.

Hudson Post: A well-defined case of hydrophobia in sheep occurred in Rollin last week. The sheep, fifteen in number, belonged to Dan Foster, who lives north of Posy Lake. They would fight among themselves, butting each other as long as they could stand. Mr. Foster was compelled to kill the lot, which he did last Thursday and Friday. Olney Stafford, who lives near Foster, also killed three effected in the same way. It is not known when the sheep were bitten, or by whose dogs.

Rev. J. M. Getchell moved his household effects from Norwalk, Ohio, via. the Wheeling and Lake Erie and M. & O. roads. He left Norwalk Thursday at twelve o'clock with his goods and horse and buggy in a freight car, and arrived at Toledo Friday morning where the M. & O. train was waiting. His car was attached to the M. & O. freight and was in Tecumseh at 9:30 on Friday morning. He feels himself under special obligations to the M. & O. officials for the prompt and obliging manner in which he was treated by them.

Fred Smiley, of Addison, is in town to-day.

Joe Emeny, of Adrian, was in town yesterday.

Adrian Record: The Deerfield Star paralyzes its city contemporaries with the announcement that its sanctum floor has got a carpet on it. Just as soon as a printer becomes wealthy he launches out into luxury.

The southern Michigan trotting, running and pacing circuit meets as follows: Brooklyn, June 10, 11 and 12: Hudson, June 17, 18 and 19: Morenci, June 24, 25 and 26: Wauseon, July 2, 3 and 4. Total premiums, $3,650.

James Elliott has been at Ann Arbor a portion of each week for several weeks, having his eyes treated. They are improving now and he hopes to be able to discontinue his visits there in a short time.

No printed invitations have been issued for the hop Friday evening, May 22nd, but "The Boys" would be pleased to see all who feel inclined to trip the light fantastic toe and will spare no pains toward their enjoyment.

Adrian Record: Tecumseh has two bands and is sighing for open air concerts and a band stand erected, "to give the boys a chance to show what they can do." Invite 'em in after a serenade and they will show what they can do in cleaning out the pantry.

Mrs. Robert Boyd was taken suddenly with apoplexy on Monday morning last and died the next morning. Her death removes a valuable member from the Presbyterian church and a most useful and beloved member from the society of our village. Funeral this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The new Millinery and Ladies furnishing goods house just opened in Adrian, from N. Y. in the old stand of Conklin & Foster next door to Stebbins' furniture store, is doing a tremendous business. The prices are so low that every one is rushing there to get a new bonnet or hat at about one half the price they have been in the habit of paying.

You cannot over estimate the importance of keeping your premises as clean as possible this summer. With cholera in western Europe it seems more than possible that we may have a visit from it before winter comes again. Let every one do his share toward keeping the village in a good sanitary condition by carefully looking after his own premises.

Adrian Press: Elias Priest is a Tecumseh gentleman, and yet it is recorded that on Sunday of last week, he was the recipient of a stunning blow from a falling scantling. We can hardly reconcile the matter unless the pulpit was undergoing repairs. A Priest certainly should not be liable to be whacked around with scantling on Sundays, unless he uses one for a fish pole.

Here is a section of the statutes of Michigan which it would be well for sportsmen to remember: "Any person who shall at any time, within this state, kill any robbin, nighthawk, whippoorwill, finch, thrush, lark, sparrow, cherry bird, swallow, yellow bird, blue bird, brown thresher, wren, martin, oriole, woodpecker, bobolink, or any song bird, or rob the nests of such birds, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be fined $5 for each bird so killed and each nest so robbed, or confined in the county jail for ten days, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Miss J. A. Hough has been replenishing her millinery rooms with a large and varied assortment of spring goods and now has one of the finest stocks ever displayed in this village. Summer hats of all sizes, styles and shapes, a fine lot of ornamental feathers and a brilliant array of artificial fruits and flowers. These latter are becoming quite fashionable for hat trimmings and when skillfully arranged produce a most pleasing effect. A full assortment of ribbons is kept on hand, and all other et ceteras to constitute a complete millinery stock. Her goods are also marked at figures to suit the present close times. Our young ladies and old ladies also will do well to inspect her goods and prices before making their spring purchases. She has secured the services of two first-class milliners, Miss Allie Warren and Mrs. S. Millard, who will do their best to please.

Business at the Lilley House last week was very brisk and has so continued thus far through this week. On Monday last forty two people took dinner there and on Tuesday sixty-four.

Adrian Record: A Bohemian oat man has been obliged to skip from Weston on account of alleged brookedness. There must be some mistake. A Bohemian oat man wouldn't do wrong. Make an oat of it.

O. C. Bacon, editor of the Petersburg Journal, died suddenly on Saturday. Mr. Bacon had been slightly ill, but was not considered in danger. His attendants left him for a few moments, and upon returning he was dead.

In the May number of the Century Gen. McClellan gives an authentic description of the Peninsular campaign from the date of the disembarkation of the Army of the Potomac at Fortress Monroe, to the seven days fighting on the banks of the James river. The sketch simply gives the general plan and strategical points of the campaign, without going into the details of the particular engagements. Twenty-three years after the event, the Old Commander of the Army of the Potomac speaks out in his own defense and gives the world a little of the inside history of those memorable days. The article is one of thrilling interest. It will provoke some criticism, quite likely, but much more commendation among all unprejudiced minds.

At half past nine this morning a special train consisting of an engine and two private cars left the Wheeling and Lake Erie depot for a trip of inspection over the Michigan and Ohio road. One of the cars belonged to the Ohio Central and the other to the Lake Erie and Western. They bore a party of the directors of the road and others, embracing Messrs C. W. Cummings, Chicago: C. S. Brice, Lima: E. H. R. Lyman and John T. Martin: Brooklyn: A. W. Scott, A. L. Bacus, George W. Davis, H. S. Walbridge, and M. D. Carrington. The party was under the charge of General Freight Agent B. McHugh, engineer W. L. Webb, and train master F. W. Vincent. The train is expected to arrive at Allegan at about 3 o'clock, from which place they expect to go to Muskegon. There the party breaks up, the Eastern men taking the Lake Erie and Western private car to Chicago and the Toledo people coming home.

As announced in the last issue of this paper, Thomas W. Keene appears at the opera house in Adrian in his celebrated personation of "Richard III" on Saturday evening, May 16th. Of Mr. Keene's Richard the Chicago Times says: "His performance was an excellent one throughout, marked with originality, character and force. In the scene with Lady Anne, in that with Buckingham and the civic authorities of London, and in the battle and death struggle with which the tragedy closes, he displayed versatility and a just comprehension of the subtleties of the character he was called upon to depict, and was the brave, cruel and defiant king even to the last. The final scene was vivid and striking in the extreme, and was perhaps the fullest evidence of Mr. Keene's powers as a tragedian. He was frequently enthusiastically applauded and called before the curtain at the conclusion of each act. Last night's personation of King Richard established his popularity in this city, and it is safe to predict for him a successful engagement."

THE SMITH WILL CASE.

The suit between the heirs of Soloman Smith and Mrs. Harriet Gifford, claiming under an alleged will, ended Saturday in our Circuit Court by a verdict sustaining the will. The heirs however we are informed will carry the case to the Supreme Court.

Messrs. Harrington, Hoagland & Smith and Mrs. Beevers representing the heirs have exerted themselves to the utmost in opposing the will and gathering together testimony are entitled to great credit for their faithfulness and skill in the defence made, while the persons representing Mrs Gifford have spared no pains or zeal in pressing her claims.

Few cases have caused as much interest as this has from its commencement. The large amount of property involved, the long residence in this county of Mr. Soloman Smith and his brother George Smith, and the sympathies and feelings of almost the whole community in their neighborhood, all tended to cause great excitement, involving the whole community.

The Smith Brothers, bachelors, lived a long time, secluded in their lives and habits, their property from time to time plundered by outsiders, seemingly without protection from anyone, the death of George at an extreme old age followed in a few years by the failing of Solomon's mental faculties, the appointment of a guardian to care for and protect him, his death, and finally the claim of a will twenty-three years old, lost and burned up, an alleged illegitimate child now grown up to womanhood, married and the mother of children, form a chain of events stranger than fiction itself, and make a case which will finally become one of the causæ celebræ in the legal annals of Lenawee County.

Will Whiting, son of Frank Whiting, of Lake Ridge, has been seriously ill with an attack of typhoid fever for the past two weeks. Fears are entertained that he may not recover.

Jim Cole, the old reliable market man, keeps constantly on hand a supply of early vegetables, of all kinds. He is bound that his customers shall have the first and best of everything the country affords. Charlie Kilborn will take pleasure in serving you.

Prof. Hubbard's class in vocal culture closes this evening. The term has been a successful one and an effort is now making to organize another class for a second term. Persons wishing to join the class should give their names to Dr. Steinhoff, at his office, or to Prof. Hubbard himself.

Adrian Record: Mrs. C. I. Wetmore will start to-morrow for her new Chicago home, and will be accompanied by her venerable mother. Mrs. Wetmore's sons are already in Chicago, which city will be the future residence of the family. Adrian people, to whom they have been so long and pleasantly known, are sorry to lose them from their midst.

Mrs. Sarah Rogers, the mother of Ex-Sheriff Bidwell's first wife, who has been living recently with Mrs. Philip Farley, at Eldred Mich., met with a serious accident about five weeks ago, breaking her hip. She never rallied from the injury and died last week at the advanced age of 96 years. The remains were brought to Macon for burial and were intered in the Macon Center cemetery last Tuesday. The deceased had lived for many years in Macon, where she was well known and highly esteemed.

The Times says that Willard Stearns will undoubtedly be the new postmaster at Adrian. The appointment is likely to be made any day, as the term of postmaster Fee expired yesterday. We heartily congratulate Bro. Stearns upon his good fortune. The appointment, both from a personal and political standpoint, is unexceptionable. Mr. Stearns is admirably fitted to perform the duties of the office, and besides it is a deserved recognition of his disinterested party services during the past few years. We believe the appointment will give entire satisfaction to the Democrats of this county. Let us shake.

W. T. Eccles, of this village, has perfected arrangements for going into the tea business on an extensive scale. He buys his teas direct from New York brokers in large lots at wholesale prices and can retail them at lower figures than were ever before offered in this vicinity. He is now filling up his store with a large stock. His establishment will be known hereafter as the "New York Tea Store.—In addition to his local trade he will send out a man or two on the road to take orders among the farmers for his teas. Mr. Eccles is one of our best young business men and the farmers can rely upon honorable dealing in all their transactions with him.

AYER'S
restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.
It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the VIGOR is unequalled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.
MR. C. P. BRIGHER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 1882: "Last fall my hair commenced falling out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald."
J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the Mt. Arthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The VIGOR is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction."
MR. ANGUS FAIRBAIRN, leader of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1882: "Ever since my hair began to give silvery evidence of the change which fleeting time procureth, I have used AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youthfulness—a matter of considerable consequence to ministers, orators, actors, and in fact every one who lives in the eyes of the public."
MRS. O. A. PRESCOTT, writing from 18 Elm St., Charlestown, Mass., April 14, 1882, says: "Two years ago about two-thirds of my hair came off. It thinned very rapidly, and was fast growing bald. On using AYER'S HAIR VIGOR the falling stopped and a new growth commenced, and in about a month my head was completely covered with short hair. It has continued to grow, and is now as good as before it fell. I regularly used but one bottle of the VIGOR, but now use it occasionally as a dressing."
We have hundreds of similar testimonials to the efficacy of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It needs but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its value.

What is gravel? What causes it, and who are most liable to it? It is frequently attended with acute pain, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and all ages are liable to it, although men who have reached or passed middle age are its most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter selected from many similar communications:
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March, 1884.
Dr. David Kennedy,
Dear Sir—You have a right[illegible]now, and I desire the public to kno[illegible]rience with Gravel and my remarka[illegible] through the use of "Favorite Reme[illegible] carpenter living in this place, and th[illegible] plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away and I had little more trouble until last July, 1883. One day when at work in my soop I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said: "I can do nothing for you.' Your case is incurable." I was frightened and went to the second who said little but gave me a perscription. It did no good. Then began a series of experiences the agony, and horror of which words cannot depict. Think of it. I was sometimes taken in the the street, and would fall writhing with agony upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven I then heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," through Mr. P. F. Cooley. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms generally abated, and I have no more trouble since. I am well, thanks to your "Favorite Remedy." Yours most gratefully,
JAMES D. KENNEDY.
What "Favorite Remedy" did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

FRUIT RAISING.

How a Superabundance of Fruit May Be Made Profitable.

Dried, with or without stoning, cherries are scarce at eighteen to thirty cents a pound, and I have seen choice pitted cherries at higher price. Hardly any fruit is easier to prepare, as cherries want no paring, and no dried fruit keeps so much richness. Pickled cherries are a cheap, excellent relish, and would sell at remarkable prices if any were to be found in market.

When fruit sells too low for profit it is time to preserve it, and reap treble gains. The quickest and cheapest ways of keeping fruit will be found most profitable, and are the only ways in which a grower can work off a crop in time to save it. Dried fruit is easily handled and is coming back into favor with knowing housekeepers, who recognize good things and know how they should be cooked. No expense for evaporators is necessary. I long since made up my mind that evaporated fruit is inferior to sun-dried in flavor, and talking with old dealers in family stores, find they prefer the sun-dried for their own use. The best cook I ever knew said the same, and there is reason for it. The sun ripens and develops sugar and flavor in cut fruit dried in its rays. To have a nice quality of dried fruit, select firm, fine, ripe specimens, wipe clean, pare and cut with silver knives, as steel turns them back on the edges, and hurry into the sun as fast as they can be prepared.

The cheapest and best way of drying fruit is to lay it on lengths of cheese cloth, suspended on a frame, out of doors, in full sun, with white mosquito netting over to keep off shreds and insects. This allows the air to reach both sides of the fruit at once, and when you want to turn it, the whole can be swung over on another cloth, leaving the first ready for a new batch. Apples should be pared, cored and cut in eight pieces. Peaches should not be pared, for the richest flavor is lost with the skin. They should have the fur removed by dipping baskets of them into weak boiling lye of wood ashes or common potash, and wiping them with coarse towels. Common peaches only need to be cut in halves to dry. We had peaches dried in this way last winter, which when cooked would be hard to tell from the best canned peaches in looks, with richer flavor.

Pickled peaches might be as staple as cucumber pickles and sold by the firkin instead of the quart. Apple and peach butter ought to be in every grocery, as plenty as raspberry jam, and a great deal better. Inferior fruit can be put to good use in this way, only no fruit should be cooked in metal kettles, brass, copper or tin. Brass kettles spoiled the sale of old-fashioned apple-butter. Sometimes I find a box of it at the large Boston grocers, but when it leaves a coppery stain on a knife blade, and still more coppery taste in the mouth, dealers are shy of recommending it. Yet there is no canned fruit or preserves better than good apple-butter stewed down in its own fruit sugar till its juice thickens into syrup. If you have not a porcelain kettle, make it in three-gallon stone jars, filling the oven with them, and you will have a better thing with less trouble.

With all the tons of grapes raised, how is it that there is not a gallon of grape syrup to be had for love or money in market? If you don't know that grape juice boiled down to a clear syrup is the most relishing thing in sickness or health, for consumptives and to keep people from getting consumptive, to be eaten as food or diluted for drink, that would banish wine sooner than all the temperance societies, you have something to learn. This article, once known, would prevent all danger of an over-crop of grapes, for it would be made and kept by the barrel, and exported for use in all climates. The new production of cider jelly, which is merely cider boiled down, without any addition till it is a solid dark jelly, is a great gift to the housekeeper, and will be the salvation of the apple orchards. What if apples are fifty cents a barrel in October? Set the cider mills going, and the huge enameled evaporating pans. Perhaps cider jelly at twelve cents a pound will repay the work, as no sugar is used.—Cor. Vick's Monthly.

Jerseys.

Jerseys have become a staple article, and are brought out with new trimmings each season. At present the fancy for wool goods extends even to jerseys, making those of wool considered more stylish than the elaborate silk and beaded affairs. The newest shapes are much shorter than those worn in the winter, and like other garments, are shorter behind than in front. They are filled with all the seams of a basque in some cases, while in others the front darts are omitted, and a vest is inserted in sloped seams that shape the jacket to the figure. For morning and plain wear dark jerseys have three lengthwise rows of Hercules braid, two inches wide, passing over the shoulders and to the end in back and front, representing box pleats. A belt of this braid is then added, with a buckle to fasten it. More dressy jerseys of poppy red or cardinal have a vest and a border on the hips, collar and sleeves made of rows of soutache set on end, with one edge turned in curves, while the other is raveled out like fringe. For yachting and other summer pleasures are navy blue jerseys trimmed with white braid, and with revers in front, on which are embroidered anchors or stars. The only beaded jerseys shown have the beads sewed in clusters at intervals, or in lines or strips. A vest of velvet is inserted in silk jerseys, and rows of narrow velvet ribbon are placed lengthwise along the edge of the garment.—Harper's Bazar.

—Certain portions of New Mexico abound in petrifactions of various kinds. It is no uncommon sight to see trees three feet in diameter and fifty feet long petrified and often crystallized. The crystals—red, yellow, black or white—are often very beautiful, and would make handsome ornaments for Eastern parlors.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The ninth lecture in the census course now running in the Lowell Institute was delivered last evening by General Walker, the subject being, "The Occupation of the American People." The value of labor statistics in national censuses has been recognized in all manufacturing countries. One-third of the last British census report is devoted to the subject alone. But the difficulties encountered in classifying and tabulating the great variety of gainful occupations are almost infinite. In the British report, Sir Charles Stubs gives a list of the occupations, the names of which as returned to the bureau would convey no idea whatever of the nature of the labor signified to a person of general education. In America the case is still worse, owing to the greater variety of labor and the makeshifts of frontier settlements. The problems of classification are further increased by the number of separate functions performed by the same person in country and unsettled districts, and the caprices of laborers add still further to the difficulty. For instance, in 1860 an attempt to classify the different varieties of domestic servitude brought forth ludicrous results. Three hundred and fifty-three cooks were found scattered over the whole country, and of these New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts had absolutely none.

The number of residents of the United States engaged in gainful avocations is 17,392,000, or 34.6 per cent. of the total population, while of the whole population over 10 years of age 48 per cent. are workers. Students, those incapable of work from injuries received, and criminals, are not included in the working population. It is noteworthy that those males who have no occupation, but live upon their private fortune, form an insignificant part of the total population. The rapid increase of the proportion of workers in late years is due to the increase of factories and the extension of the principle of the division of labor. The former cause has been instrumental in bringing women in the field of labor, and thus largely increasing the percentage, while the influence of the latter cause constantly creates a new demand for labor.

The number of persons engaged in agriculture is largely in excess of that in any other occupation, forming 44.1 per cent. of the total working population. The omission of slave labor in the seventh and eighth censuses has left no standard of comparison with the latter censuses, as the enormous amount of labor engaged in cotton production in the Sout was wholly unrepresented before 1860. At the present time about 4,500,000 of the 7,600,000 engaged in agriculture are independent farmers and planters, nearly 3,000,000 are farm laborers, and 130,000 are florists, gardeners, etc. It is safe to assume that agriculture furnishes the means of sustenance to one-half of the total population of the country. A vast increase of those engaged in mining has taken place in late years.

Among the artisans, carpenters take lead in numbers, having increased from 150,000 in 1850 to 373,000 in 1880. A reduction in the rate of increase is noticed in late years, however, due to the manufacture by machinery of doors, sashes, etc., work which was formerly done by the job. The number of coopers and wheelwrights has suffered little change since 1850 for similar reasons. Among those engaged in personal and professional service, amounting to 4,424,000 persons, many grades of labor are included, from the lawyer, clergyman, physician, and teacher on the one hand to the barber, bootblack, and household drudge on the other. The number of clergymen has increased from 26,842 in 1850 to 64,698 in 1880; lawyers from 23,939 to 64,137; physicians, from 40,500 to 86,000; teachers, from 30,000 to 238,000; dentists, from 2,923 to 12,314. There are now 4,812 actors, 3,500 architects, 1,131 authors and literary men, 1,168 chemists, 8,261 civil engineers, and 12,308 journalists.

In the statistics of domestic service, a curious fact is observed—namely, that in spite of the increasing wealth and prosperity of the American people, the number of domestics in proportion to families has, in nearly all the States, steadily declined in late years, there being at present about nine families per servant on the average. In the "good old days before the war," when each Southern plantation was overrun with blacks of every size, age, and description, the proportion of domestics was, of course, high, and even now the Southern States are well situated in this matter; but in New England, the Central States, and the West the decline in the rate is unaccountable. In the Pacific States the introduction of Chinese labor has somewhat raised a normally low proportion. The figures showing domestic service in England are interesting in this connection. From them it appears that there are 1,287,000 indoor servants, as against 1,076,000 in America, while of all females in the United Kingdom between fifteen and twenty years of age one-third are domestic servants.—Boston Herald.

Foot-Ball.

In President Eliot's annual report he says in regard to inter-collegiate football: "It is very improble that a game which involves violent personal collision between opposing players can ever be made a good inter-collegiate game. Boxing and wrestling, which do require such personal collision, are apt to degenerate just as foot-ball has done. An ill effect of some of the inter-collegiate contests is their tendency to restrict the number of men in college who practice the competitive sports. The keenness of the competition creates a high standard of excellence, and persons who know that they can not reach that standard cease to play. The athletic sports ought to cultivate morals as well as physical courage, fair dealing and the sense of honor. If any form of unfaithfulness, unfairness or meanness is tolerated in them they become sources of widespread moral corruption. If students do not find their sense of honor cultivated and refined by their college life they may be sure that their education is failing at its most vital point."

Do You Know a Man

Whose wife is troubled with debility, nervousness, liver complaint or rheumatism? Just tell him it is a pity to let the lady suffer that way, when Brown's Iron Bitters will relieve her. Mrs. L. B. Edgerly, Dexter, Me., says: "Brown's Iron Bitters cured me of debility and palpitation of the heart." Mrs. H. S. McLaughlin, of Scarborough, Me., says the bitters cured her of debility. Mrs. Harding, of Windham Centre, in the same state, says it cured her of dizziness in the head. So it has cured thousands of other ladies.

WHITE SEAL BURNING OIL!!

The New York Board of Health estimates that 80,000 lives have been destroyed by the explosive qualities of petroleum. If every household would adopt the White Seal Oil for family use, none of these unfortunate accidents would occur.

WHITE SEAL BURNING OIL

Has none of the defects usually found in common oils. It cannot be exploded, does not char the wick, will not smoke, emits no offensive odor and prevents the breaking of chimneys.

WHITE SEAL BURNING OIL

is a rich oil for illuminating purposes. It is as light in color as pure spring water. It gives a strong steady light and burns much longer than common oils.

If this oil is not sold in your vicinity, send your order direct to us for a barrel or a case containing two five gallon cans.

DR. A. FRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

HON. SIR EDWARD THORNTON.

Sir Edward Thornton, who represents Great Britain at the court of the Czar of Russia, is one of England's most experienced diplomats fully able to cope with the wily Russian ministers and statesmen who have long been known for their intrigues. Sir Edward comes from a most aristocratic family, his father at one time serving as Minister to Portugal. It can therefore be said he is by birth as well as breeding a diplomat. His first service in this capacity was in 1842 when he was attached to the mission at Turin. He was appointed paid attache at Mexico in 1845 and Secretary of Legation to the same country in 1851. From April 1852 till Oct. 1853 he acted as Secretary to the late Sir Chas. Hopham's special mission to the River Platte. He was appointed charge de affairs and Consul General to the Republic of New Granada in May 1854 but was transferred to Uruguay in Sept. of the same year. He was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Confederation in 1859 and in July 1861 was sent on a special mission to the Emperor of Brazil and in the following month was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to that country. He remained in that position until Sept. 1867 when he was transferred in the same capacity to the court of the King of Portugal. In the following Dec. he was appointed Minister to Washington vice the late Sir Frederick Lewis C. B. In recognition of his services he was made a Companion of the Bath in Feb. 1881 and a Knight Commander of the same order April 1883. He was sworn in to the Privy Council in 1881. He was appointed Ambassador at St. Petersburg in May [illegible]

HILLSDALE MODESTY

We have recently been shown one of the official envelopes regularly used for their correspondence by the faculty and students of Hillsdale college. Every half the front surface of this remarkable wrapper is occupied by a neatly printed map of Michigan and northern Indiana and Ohio showing in the geographical center the city of Hillsdale, extending like some vast metropolis over three whole countries. The larger Michigan cities, such as Morganville, Homer, Pentwater, Bad Axe and the like, stand bravely out in full view, while Ann Arbor, Adrian, Albion, and other small towns which happen to have colleges in them, have not so much as a fly speck upon the map to hint at their existence.

For a college, a greater number of whose students are in its kindergarten and grammar school departments it has both of those adjuncts, whose faculty comprises less than ten professors, and whose curriculum is little above that of a good high school, this is enterprise indeed. But it ill becomes a religious college to bear false witness against its neighbors. If Hillsdale is to be pictured as covering three counties, Ann Arbor, being twice as large, should certainly occupy no fewer than six.

We are told in large, black-letter type, under the map above referred to, that Hillsdale "is the heart of three states." Let us call it rather the cheek of the world.—Ann Arbor Argonaut.

OBITUARY.

Sarah Matilda Betts, the daughter of William and Mary A. Bresie, of Tecumseh, Michigan, was born at Conesus, New York, Dec. 28th 1829 and died at Cleveland Ohio, May 4th 1885. Mrs. Betts was married in 1872 to Mr. Howard J. Betts at Cleveland Ohio, which at that time was the residence of her parents. She subsequently moved to Tecumseh, where she resided for a number of years. At the time of her death she was a resident of Edmore Montcalm County, this state. She leaves a husband, a resident of Edmore, her parents, residents of Tecumseh, a brother Mr. Wm. R. Bresie, of Decatur, Ill. and a sister Mrs. John Crowell, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Betts united with the First Baptist church at Cleveland Ohio, in 1865, and has ever since been an earnest, active Christian woman. Her life has been as beautiful as that of every good woman. She was always an obedient affectionate daughter, a loving wife and a kind sister. Her ill health for the past few years of her life has kept her from that active work in church and society, for which her taste and intelligence had so well fitted her.

The deceased, during her few years residence in Tecumseh, had gathered many friends about her, who followed her remains to the tomb with tears of heartfelt sympathy. Retiring in disposition, and wrapped up in her domestic duties, she yet possessed a heart overflowing with Christain charity and loving kindness for all. Although gone, she is not forgotten, and her many good qualities of mind and heart will ever remain green in the memory of those who are left behind in this vale of tears. The stricken relatives will recieve the heartfelt sympathies of our community in this season of their bereavement.

THE PROBATE COURT.

Following is the record of business transacted at the probate court for the week ending May 5, 1885:

Estate of Sally Wood, deceased: warrant and inventory filed.

Estate of John S. Buttrick, sr., deceased: petition for allowance of administrator's final account; hearing June 1.

Estate of Johannah Hansen, deceased: affidavit of publishing and posting commissioners' notices; commissioners' warrant and report filed.

Estate of Orville W. DeGolyer, deceased: affidavit of publication; order extending time one year from April 4, 1885, to pay debts and close estate.

Estate of Robert J. Bradley, deceased: warrant and inventory filed.

Estate of Charles I. Wetmore, deceased: affidavit of publication and affidavit of service filed; order of continuance until May 11, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Estate of Peter Hack, deceased: affidavit of publication; administrator's first account allowed.

The artists who have been pursuing "A Wild Goose Chase" along the shores of the Baltic and through the pages of Harper's Magazine, will accompany "The Descent" in the forthcoming June issue, with some account of North Jutland, a quaint German province near Hamburg. This is called Vierlande "Four-lands", the little province, of only forty square miles, being composed of four polders, or lake beds, separated from each other and protected from the Elbe by great dikes. The costumes and customs are old fashioned and most curious, and the general stability is illustrated by the fact that the principal inn at Bergedorf, the chief town, has been kept by one family for over two hundred and fifty years. "If a Garden of Eden can exist in that latitude," says Mr. Frank D. Millet, who writes the article, "Vierlande certainly has superior claims to the title."

The attitude of Catholicism toward our public schools—a problem of grave concern at the present time—is to be discussed from opposite premises in the June number of the North American Review, by M. C. O'Byrne, of North Carolina, against the Roman Catholic Church, and Bishop Keane, of Virginia, in defense of its policy.

Few People Escape.

The taint of scrofula in the blood. With many it is hereditary, but it may also be acquired from want of air or lack of exercise, from improper food, or any cause which brings about weakness of the body and impurity of the blood. The disease is characterized by running sores, abscesses, swellings, enlarged joints, sore eyes, etc. No medicine has been so successful in curing scrofula, as Hood's Sarsaparilla. The most terrible running sores gradually disappear under the purifying and strengthening influences of this great medicine. If you are a sufferer from scrofula still more convincing evidence as to the wonderful success of Hood's Sarsaparilla, send to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass., for a book containing many remarkable cures.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Miss Anna Shutes, daughter of Charlie Shutes, is very ill with consumption.

Abram Glimpse who has been sick for several months is again confined to his bed.

Mrs. M. Nimocks has gone to Jackson for a visit of several weeks.

Mrs. Frank Brown has been quite sick for a week or two.

Katie Liebelt has been very sick for three or four weeks, with brain fever. Dr. John Tuttle is the attending physician, and has hopes of her recovery; at present, from the fact that she has withstood the disease for so long.

George Field and Charlie Thompson, of Tecumseh, were in Clinton over Sunday.

Mrs. Jane VanDeMark, visited her daughter, Mrs. George Kies, in Tecumseh last week.

The rite of baptism was administered to five persons last Saturday evening, and to one Sunday evening at St. John's church.

Charles Clark, Leb. Pomeroy, Selden Demuth and Kos. Davis, went fishing out to Evans Lake last week. They caught fish by the bushel.

The receipts at the Episcopal weight social last Thursday night were over $7.

Rubie Woodward met with a narrow escape from death last Wednesday. He was at the foundry playing, when he was supposed to be in school, and had climbed to the cupola, and not being able to realize the danger of his situation, was soon overcome by the gas. When found by one of the men, he was insensible, and would soon have been past the reach of help. Restoratives were promptly applied and in a few moments he recovered consciousness. It will be a lesson to the boy, and it ought to be to many others of his age, who are apt to consider themselves wiser than anyone else.

One of our citizens was caught looking in at windows one night last week. He has received information that a repetition of the offense will be met by a generous dose of shot. It is not the first time that this same person has been caught upon his neighbors' premises at a suspicious hour of the night, and this business will probably not go much further, without an investigation into the gentleman's intentions.

Mrs. Carrie Corwin and children, of Brooklyn, have been visiting at her sister's, Mrs. Augusta Brooks'.

Rev. Joseph St. John and daughter Ida went to Tecumseh Tuesday afternoon, to attend confirmation services there in the evening at St. Peter's church.

J. E. McCollum went to Detroit last Monday on business.

Ed. VanDeMark went to Adrian the first of the week.

E. R. Smith is making arrangements for putting a roller process in his grist mill, capacity 75 bbls. per day. Two firms have already given him their prices for the job, and the third will do so in a few days. Clinton is abreast with the times, in the matter of flour mills.

An itinerant photograph gallery made its appearance among us last Tuesday. We believe it hails from Dundee, but how long it is going to stay is as yet unknown.

The next Episcopal social will be held at the residence of Mrs. Laura VanDeMark, Thursday evening, May 28th. All are cordially invited.

A very large number of the old pupils met Monday evening at the residence of J. B. Hause to complete the final arrangements as far as possible for the coming reunion next week Wednesday evening.

The committee on program were not ready to formulate a full and complete program for the evening as it will be rendered, as all the parts had not yet been reported there, but suffice it to say here that the entertainment will open with music entitled "A Greeting Glee," after which will follow the address of welcome by J. E. McCollum; response by Prof. O. C. Williams; music; essay by Mrs. C. H. Bigelow, of Dowagiac; essay by Mrs. Jennie Whedon of Tecumseh; poem by A. Herbert Snow of Winona, Minn; song by Mrs. Franc Graham—the whole made up of music, songs, essays, poems, &c., and to close by a valedictory by Dr. R. B. House of Tecumseh.

It is hoped that all the friends, both of the teachers and pupils, will endeavor to attend the entertainment as a very pleasant time is anticipated. Boys and children of course are made welcome to come if accompanied by their parents, but not otherwise allowed.

The supper in the afternoon is gotten up expressly for the teachers, their old pupils and families, and will be served about five o'clock.

By unanimous vote the representatives of the Clinton Local, Tecumseh HERALD and Tecumseh News are invited to attend afternoon and evening.

On motion J. E. McCollum was chosen President of the Day.

J. E. McCOLLUM, Sec'y.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Physicians renew weekly their promises of sickness to those who neglect spring purification, and to make sure of exemption, A. P. Cook paints over accumulated time stains, within and without his store. Familiar walks and long trodden floors have been replaced by new ones, and this week the counters on which goods have been displayed and measured for fifty years, will be consigned to the relic chamber, and new ones, scrolled and bracketed to harmonize with modern surroundings usurp their honors. To build such a trade-mart, when there was neither rail or wagon road, shows that will and energy are not of recent date, and a vast undertaking of the past stands as a monument for enterprise not yet dead; as an offer to give five hundred acres of land for a soldiers home, by Vineyard lake, attests. Very likely city influence may secure the coveted honor for a larger place than Brooklyn; but we have yet to hear of an offer that outrivals this, either in generous breadth of domain, facility for transporting camp equipage or for health and beauty of location. It has long been the favorite picnic and fishing ground. Soldiers who camped there a few years ago, will not fail to remember the high woodey table lands, and cultivated fields around Vineyard. A beautiful road leads to and through this summer labyrinth that is not easily overestimated in moneyed value, or for its own and surrounding advantages and if the gift is not accepted, the present owner will have far more reason than the state, to be proud of a magnificent rejection.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday evening, April 24th, the Farmers' Social club met at the residence of Mr. John Fisher. It being a very busy time for the farmers on account of the lateness of spring there was a small attendance and consequently the program previously arranged was postponed until our next meeting, which occurs May 29th at Mr. John Rector's, at 4 P. M. sharp. It is hoped the Farmers will be through with their hurry by that time so that they will turn out and give Mr. Rector a rousing meeting, and it is also expected that at our next meeting arrangements will be made for our annual excursion to the lakes, so all are respectfully invited to attend.

The program arranged for our next meeting.

Congressman Tarsney, while in Washington recently, related a little of his experience with new appointees. Said he: "There was a bright young fellow, who was very desirous of becoming a mail clerk. I recommended him, and he was appointed and took his run. A couple of days after he went on his route I was sitting in my office when this young man came in. "Hello! said I; I thought you were handling mail bags.' 'I've got through,' was the reply, 'I couldn't stand it; those mail bags were too much for me. I thought that all I had to do was to take the pouches on and put them off—soft snap I supposed. But great Scott! I had to work like sin. I've had enough of it. Say Tim, was this what I've been carrying torchlights for the past ten years for? I advise you not to appoint any more mail clerks. Every one of them will vote against you at the next election."

A state sanitary convention will be held at Ypsilanti on Tuesday, and Wednesday, June 30 and July 1st. The following addresses and subjects will be presented and discussed.

The Evening News, in commenting on the charge against Dr. Geo. Ferguson, says: "What a snug sum could be collected throughout the State, if every druggist so offending could be fined for delinquencies in this respect."

FENCE BOARD ADVERTISING.

A stalwart farmer of Macon dropped into the HERALD sanctum the other day and inquired for the legal editor. He was a fine representative of the old school, bluff and hearty, robust and honest. His early education had been sadly neglected, but he had views of his own and was able to express himself in emphatic, if not classical language. We invited him to be seated in the arm chair, and make known his business.

"What I want to know is this. I want to know if there is any law agin fence board advertisin'. Now, I don't perpose to furnish free bill boards for anybody. If a man wants to plaster my fence, can't I compel him to pay for it? Have I got to have my front fence ornamented with all sorts of nonsense, and have no remedy agin the nuisance except to grin and bear it? These fence board signs is an abomination. If a board gits knocked off it allus gits nailed on bottom side up, and then the sign is upside down. Some city artist will come along and paint a flamin' sign on the fence. Inside of four weeks, some smart school young'un will doctor it by scratchin' out some letters and puttin' in some, till the sign reads as though the feller that painted it had strayed away from some lunatic asylum, and then the neighbors will be pokin' fun at our winen folks for havin' a circus on the front fence. Ain't a man's fences his private property the same as his houses and barns? That's what I want to know. Why don't men advertise in the newspapers? That's what newspapers are for, I take it. People cheat the newspapers out of their honest dues, and go round the country makin' a laughin' stock of themselves, and a circus bill board out of the farmers' fences. If there's any law to stop such vandalism I want to know it, and if there ain't no law the legislature better make one."

We acknowledged the homely good sense of our friends observations, and respectfully referred him to some attorney for the desired information.

The retirement of several newly appointed mail clerks after a trip or two has had the effect to cool the ardor of many young men who have been anxious to wrestle with Uncle Sam's mail bags. It requires young men who are quick to learn the names and locations of post-offices, are ready readers of all sorts of writing and possess a fair portion of good substantial brawn as well as brain. The post-office department ask congressmen to be kind enough not to recommend for mail clerks men who are over forty. It is claimed that young men between the ages of 18 and 25 make the best officials. Being young they learn the names of postoffices readily and remember them far better than older men. No old men need apply as very few of them would be able to hold a route.

Some people believe the sentence of the violin thief—10 days in jail—was too light. We think not. The man who steals a wandering fiddler's fiddle is a public benefactor, and saves the general ear from much torture. It was well enough to discountenance theft by a small punishment, however. [Adrian Record.] See here, Mr. Record, we would have you understand that Eugene Weaver, of this place, was the owner of that fiddle. A man who steals an Adrian fiddler's fiddle may be a public benefactor, but when it comes to applying that appellation to the man who robs a Hudson musician, you're way off, especially in the case of Mr. Weaver.—Hudson Gazette.

We are in the possession of a good joke that occurred at the White House on Tuesday last. Mr. ——, a Republican New York Postmaster, called upon the President and not being assured of being retained he asked the President if he would answer a few questions. The President said if it was in his power to do so he would. There upon the President was asked what are you going to do with Maria and the kid. The President, with a smile, said, "Oh, that's been settled long ago. I will put Maria's face on the two-cent stamps and the kids on the one-cent stamps, and you Republican postmasters can lick the gummed side of them.—Exchange.

The National Camp Meeting management, which held so large a meeting at Lansing last year, intended to hold a meeting this year at Pine Lake, but owing to the indications of an unprecedented attendance, have been compelled to advertise Lansing Fair Ground as the place, and June 13 to 21 as the time. Bishop Mallalieu of New Orleans, Rev. Drs. McDonald and Steele of Boston and others from several states will be present.

"GABE."

"I Was Neahly Too Late, But Thank Ou Lawd, I Sabed You."

Even yet in the quiet evenings I can fancy the roll of that grand, deep voice, soaring out over the waters of the gulf in liquid melody, or quavering in mournful improvisation among the orange trees in front of his cabin door, where Gabe was wont to sit in the warm nights with his wondering eyes fixed on the stars, singing for an hour at a time with only Aunt Dinah near to hear him.

Big, black, grave and kind, that is how the memory of Gabe comes before me to-night, with his simple, earnest way, the most ungainly and yet the tenderest-hearted of all God's living creatures. He had been on our farm for years. He seldom laughed, was always sad and mournful—had been so from childhood, it was said.

On any question of dispute that occurred among the other negroes Gabe was referred to as authority in the matter, and strange to say he was usually right.

"Why doesn't he ever sing?" I asked him, after I had listened to one of his pathetic chants or hymns. He looked at me a moment with his queer way, for he had not noticed my approach, and said: "I don'o, myself, hardly. I sit here and I lows to look up yonder at de stars and think o' my baby, dere comes a wont fo' long like as if de angels was a singin' in a mighty clear, long, low, sweet call or clean place to sleep, and de angels a hovin' 'round me."

My little sister Tella, then a golden-haired fairy of six, was a great favorite of Gabe's. With her he would talk as with no others, and was always near her when circumstances permitted. She, too, was fond of him, and many a little treat found its way to him and old "Aunt Dinah" through her favor.

One night—I remember it well—it was in warm March, that most beautiful of all months in Florida, when the magnolias put forth their bloom and the land is sweet in their incense—I had retired early, for I was weary with a hard day's ride from Tampa, up the gulf.

It might have been about two o'clock in the morning when I was awakened by a deafening crash of thunder that died away in reverberating echoes over the water.

Usually I would roll off to slumber again, but this time I could not do so. I lay there instead, watching the play of the lightning and waiting for the rain to fall.

The atmosphere was close, almost stifling, the air permeated with electricity.

Suddenly I fancied I heard the front door open gently and close again. Was it only fancy caused by the excited state I was in? Something urged me to arise, and I did so. Stepping to the front window, which commanded a view of the piazza, I looked out; all was blackest night, with muttering thunder overhead.

As I stood there the earth was illumined by a most vivid flash, everything appearing as clear as day. Directly before me, half-way down the carriage drive leading to the road along the bluff, rapidly glided a small slender figure in white, with golden hair streaming back in the wind.

Only a moment did the light last, but in that moment I saw and knew it was Tella—Tella, and going straight toward the chalk-bluff that rose sheer one hundred feet from the sands below!

My mother had mentioned some days before that the child was given to walking in her sleep, though her somnambulism had hitherto been confined to doors. To night some freak had sent her forth, out along a path that must lead her to a terrible fate unless I could reach her in time.

Out of the room, over the piazza, down the drive I went quicker than I had ever gone before. The night was of inky darkness; I could not see an inch before me, and the lightning, so vivid before, had ceased. Every moment seemed an age. If the child had turned aside all might be well, if not—Heaven help her, for well I knew what must be her fate.

On I rushed, half-mad with suspense. Another flash, and I saw her not ten yards from the edge of the bluff.

"Tella," I called, "Tella!" In my despair my feet grew heavy, my knees quaked, a horrible nightmare was upon me, clammy perspiration oozed from every pore.

Another flash; she was on the brink, and I not thirty steps away—was powerless to save her! But, there! In the dying light a great black body springs forward and seems to mingle with the white. There comes a startled cry, a dull thud, and all is still save the dash of the rain that had now commenced to fall in torrents.

A moment more and I was bending over a little white figure, lying moaning on the sand, with hair of gold bedraggled over face and neck.

Thank God, it was Tella, unharmed and safe. She cried partially as I took her in my arms, seemingly too bewildered to speak.

But who was it that so providentially stayed her at that awful moment? The flash was so slight that I could not tell, though I fancied it was Gabe. If so, where had he disappeared?

As my eye light upon it I looked towards the edge of the bluff. Just beyond the place where Tella had fallen, a large gap was broken in the bank, as if some body had crashed it off in struggling.

Quick as thought it flashed upon me that the black, if it were he, had caught the child as she was about to fall, and to save her had cast herself down instead, and so met his death on the rocks below.

As quickly as I could I made my way back to the house, with the child in my arms. The door was wide open as I had left it, and all was silent.

Laying Tella on a sofa I roused my mother, and on her appearance, gave her a hurried account of what had passed.

I roused the darkey boy Zep out of bed and sent him to call several of the hands, with orders to come at once to the house.

The boy appeared in a short time with five of our negroes, all about half asleep and all wondering at their abrupt awakening.

Briefly I explained what had happened, and having secured lanterns we together set out to learn the worst in regard to Gabe.

I was sure now it was Gabe for Zep had found his cabin deep wide open, and Aunt Dinah seemed asleep alone.

Down below the entrance to our carriage way some few yards, the sand descended in a regular slope to the water's edge.

To this point we quickly hurried, and were soon on the white, sandy beach, high up which the waves were rushing from the force of the now spent storm.

A minute's time and we had reached a spot directly under the break in the bluff above. At first I could see nothing, but a low groan drew me to a sort of recess washed in the face of the cliff.

In this lay Gabe, moaning in pain, with face and neck bathed in blood.

As I bent over him with the lantern's light, he looked at me and endeavored to speak, but the effort only caused fresh blood to gush from his nostrils and mouth.

Tenderly we took him up between us and carried him back along the beach, up the bluff's side with the light of the stars shining on earth, for the storm had passed, as quickly as tropical storms do, and was muttering off in tattered masses toward the Indian Islands. Along the roadway up the garden drive over the piazza into the room we bore him, placing him gently on a couch that had been hastily prepared.

I dispatched one of the hands in all haste for Dr. Reynold's, our family physician, but as his residence was some two miles distant it was nearly an hour before he arrived.

In the meantime we made the poor sufferer as easy as possible, washing away the stains of blood from his face and neck, and cooling his throbbing temples with dampened cloths.

I gave him a strong dose of brandy, which had the effect of reviving him sufficiently to speak, though but little as the hemorrhage was very great.

How much he was hurt I could not tell, though I knew the arm was broken and some serious internal injury sustained.

When Dr. Reynolds arrived he made a careful investigation, then called me aside and said: "The matter is serious beyond hope. His time to live is but a few hours at the most. The only thing we can do is to keep him as quiet as possible—even now he is rapidly sinking."

After the doctor had departed I returned beside him and asked: "Do you feel easier, Gabe?" He smiled, as he faintly replied: "Yes, much easier, thank you. But hit will soon be ovah: dere ain't no use tellin' me to cheah up! I knows I's agoin'—gom' fast. Hit's hard to go—but the Lawd's will be done."

He turned to Tella, who was seated beside him, and, stroking her hair with his great horny hand, now feeble and weak as a child's, he said: "I's so glad you's safe, honey—so glad; what's my old life to you's—so young and faih. I was neahly too late, but thank ou' Lawd I sabed you. Hit makes me so happy, and when you's one of de bright angels way up dere beyond de gates, you'll not fo'get old Gabe will you, honey?"

For answer the golden head bowed over the rugged features, the golden curls fell among the kinky gray, the fresh young lips red with the blood of life, trembled on the pain-drawn forehead, while tears fell fast from her eyes and glistened like pearls among the blood-stains on the couch.

There was a glad smile on the old man's face as the child arose, and all the love of a full warm heart shone in his eyes as he looked upon her.

The hours sped on until the morning sun rose over the broad waters of the gulf, and shone in crimson and gold through the latticed creepers.

Gabe was very quiet, his eyes fixed on the ceiling, his hand resting on "Aunt Dinah's."

As the day broadened he became visably weaker, his breath coming at longer intervals, with labored intonation; his mind, too, began to wander, his voice at times rising in incoherent murmurs.

I gave him another dose of brandy, and again he revived, though the effort was the last of expiring nature.

He looked at us in a dazed and wondering way for a few moments, and seeing "Aunt Dinah" crying bitterly, said: "Don't cry, hon'—don't cry. Hit's only fo' a little while longer; a few moah days, or maybe a few moah yeahs, but we'll meet again; yes, meet in dat lan' wha' dere's no moah pain and trouble nevah come, and we'll be white as snow de-ere, hon', among de angel bands—a' singin' round de Great white T'rone."

On and on the little marble clock ticked on the mantelpiece, minute by minute, shortening the strand of life, drawing nearer and nearer the "shadow of the valley."

"Hit's gittin' so dark"—the dying man said—"night am comin' fast, my eyes am clo'n', de day am nearly gone, but de shade am very pleasah. I see angels 'mah' angels standin' dere; dey's walkin' in de sunlight, dey's singin' in de glory—and now dey beckon me to come. Yes, I's comin'—I's—"

Night shadows were indeed falling, and the shore was very, very near.

"Hold to me, dere!"

"I am clo'ser—I's leavin' you hon,' but I's gom' to a better lan' my soul will be white as de lambs." When you's ready to come, I'll be dere to meet you an' we'll be young again—to do new life bein again—in ou' Father's home. I'se so happy. No moah trouble—no more pain. Clo'ser hon'—clo'ser."

The lips moved again, but no sound came forth—speech had ceased to be, had flickered out in darkness, and the poor old body was following quietly after.

His lips grew wide apart, his breath came in irregular gasps, until at last it ceased. There was a long quiver in the frame and Gabe was dead.

Down in a corner of our garden, where tall trees make twilight love at noonday, in a spot so fitful and quiet, where dead mosses make foot-falls silent, is a little mound with a plain marble slab at its head. This is the grave of Gabe.

In the warm summer months during vacation a Northern college girl comes back to us a tall, fair girl. "She is always glad to return to the dear old home," she says, "though it is quaint and old-fashioned."

Many times before the summer wanes does she softly tread the mossy earth beside the dead and kneeling by the little mound offers anew thanks to Him who saw fit to prolong her life, at the sacrifice of that pure and noble soul.—W. Glyndon, in Detroit Free Press.

CAMEL RIDING.

I think I told you that one of the funny things of Korti camp life was to see the Household troops, or the Heavies, learning infantry drill. "Fours deep," "fours right, left," "form squares" resounded in their quarters all day long. Lord Charles Beresford's Naval Brigade arrived on the 6th, and having promptly pitched their tents and made themselves comfortable on the following day, they turned out on camelback to learn to handle these ships of the desert. "What's the British army a coming to?" I overheard a soldier who was looking on saying to his comrades. "It's a turning it upside down Lord Wolseley is and metamorphosing everything. First he makes sailors of us infantry, sending us here in boats, then he turns the cavalry into infautrymen, and I'm hanged if he ain't a making cavalry of the sailors." Perhaps he was. Anyhow, the process was droll in the extreme. With much persuasion Jack had towed, strung into line, some sixty camels, for the detachment to ride which was to march to Metemmeh. Lord Charles Beresford and Sir Herbert Stewart and staff, with many more were there to see. the Naval Brigade drill. "Mount," shouted Lieutenant Piggott, who was drilling the contingent. Aboard went Jack, still more quickly the camels snorted and surged to their feet, spilling and sending sprawling in all directions many a brave sailor. Somehow none of the men were hurt, and while Jack was trying to remount the lookers-on smiled audibly; even Lord Charles Beresford himself instantly produced his handkerchief and smothered something that sounded more like laughter than coughing, though it was his own command which was furnishing the fun. When the sailors at length had securely mounted, they seemed unhappy. Possibly they did not like the short lurches and swinging of the camels, and would have preferred a topgallant yard in a storm at sea. The camels also did not appear to respond promptly to the tugs given by Jack to the guiding head-rope which serves as a rein for the animal, and the brutes blundered against each other, throwing the line at times into confusion. Their officers, with wary eyes to faults of that sort, strove to correct them by calling to their men, "Hard a port," or "hard a starboard there." One sailor I heard directed to pass the rope across, as "that brute steers better from the port side." Another Jack had so loaded his animal with the equipment for the march that he was told to dismount and "stow it afresh, as the camel's saddle had a bad list." Jack, however, was in dead earnest, and meant learning to ride, so the detachment persevered. The spectators might have, I think, recognized this seriousness. Not a good deal of quiet chaff went on all the same. The cruelest thing I have heard for a long time was when the troop got the order to trot, and the sailors went jog, jump, thump in their saddles, as if they were playing leapfrog on the camels. "Don't bump so," cried a bystander to one of the sailors; "you'll make his head ache." Jack turned upon his tormentor a melancholy eye, moistened either by the poignancy of his situation or the cold callousness of the remark.—Cairo Cor. London Telegraph.

Singular Cure For Nervous Affections.

Some years ago a story was current of a woman who applied at a London hospital for treatment of a nervous affection. After listening to a recital of her symptoms, the doctor made her shut her lips upon a clinical thermometer. Upon removing it the patient exclaimed: "Why, I declare it has done me good already." The doctor humored her delusion, and refrained from any other treatment than a few more applications of the magical glass tube. She was soon cured. A parallel case is now cited by the Philadelphia Medical News, an hysterical patient having been cured by magnetism. The magnet was of wood, but capped with metal, so as to seem cold to the touch.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high-living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

THE WONDER

Is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it, at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

ANDREW JACKSON'S HOME.

"One Hickory's" Body Servant Relates Some Interesting Facts as to "Old Marstre's" Peculiarities.

The proposition which has been made, and which is now before the Legislature, to tender the Hermitage Farm, a first-class tract of some 500 acres, the property of the State of Tennessee, to the United States Government, for the purpose of having built thereon a home for the soldiers of the war of 1812, the Floridian war, the Mexican war, and all wars prior to the late Confederate war, is now before the Tennessee Legislature.

The other day a legislative committee went out to the Hermitage to "spy out" the property, and their arrival and their presence quite completely broke up the quiet colored people located on "Old Marster's Farm."

They came to town to see Governor Bate about it. They had heard that the farm was to be sold, and its occupants turned out to shift elsewhere. The speaker of the delegation was Uncle Alfred Jackson, now eighty-two years old, one of General Jackson's old-time servants. He was in great trouble. He said to the Governor:

"Gin'l Bate, I done heard dat you're gwine to turn all us old Jackson niggers out, and I come here for to find out about it."

"Pshaw, Alfred! Somebody has been fooling you," said Governor Bate. "Don't trouble yourself; go home and rest contented. You can live at the Hermitage a long time yet, and I will see that you are not disturbed."

The old darkey took the Governor's assurance with such good grace, and seemed so well satisfied with the turn things had taken the World reporter ventured to pump him as to General Jackson's peculiarities.

"Uncle Alfred," said the reporter, "wasn't the General pretty high-tempered?"

"Well, young marster, dat depins on de circumstances. He wouldn't allow for no man to 'spute his word; and he wouldn't allow no man for to cry him down. He were jokey and full of fun, but whenever he said by the eternals God!' den everybody knowed just what he said."

"Dis here statue ou' dar," said Uncle Alfred, pointing to the bronze General rampant, "dis here statue looks like him about de head and face, but de one at New Orleans is de best. I was dar at home when Mr. Healey and Colonel Earle painted de portrait of de General."

"And you remember their visits?"

"Oh course, I does, I ain't lived wid any udder white people. I were born at de Hermitage in 1803, and I were twelve year old when old marster left Nashville for to fight de battle of de New Orleans. I remember when old marster died in 1845, for I was standin' right dar longside of his bed. He were de greatest man what ever lived—everybody sa'd so, and all of his black people believed it."—Nashville World.

THE "VICTORY."

How Lord Nelson's Flag-Ship Survives the Lapse of Three-Quarters of a Century.

I feel quite sure that few American boys have visited Lord Nelson's flag-ship, the glorious old "Victory," on whose deck the gallant Admiral received his death-wound October 21st, 1805, in that famous battle in the Bay of Trafalgar. The "Victory" led the attack against the combined navies of France and Spain. It was Lord Nelson's mightiest victory, and the power of France on the ocean was destroyed. The good old ship still presents a fine appearance and looks strong enough for another sea-fight. Few of her original timbers remain, however. The "Victory" floats high out of water, and her ports, from which the cannon have so often proclaimed England's victories, are mostly closed, and the few guns on board are used only for firing salutes. The British flag still waves from the mast and a small company of sailors guard the ship.

After coming on board, an escort is provided. Visitors are requested to register their names and contribute a trifle toward paying for this escort duty by the crew, whose chief employment is to show visitors the interesting places on board. We first went on the main-deck. A brass plate set in one part of this deck is inscribed: "Here Nelson fell." Our guide said that "Lord Nelson had no right to stand near this spot," and that "he was killed by one of his own men, who shot him from the cross-trees;" but we did not care to listen to such a story, believing, rather, as is indeed the truth, that Nelson was killed by the enemy.

The great deck, as it now appears without a single gun, looked lonely enough, and we descended, by way of the decks between, to the cock-pit, where the gallant sailor died. It is a damp, gloomy and silent place, where, on that eventful day, and at the close of Nelson's greatest battle, the great chief was tenderly carried. The gallant sailor had requested that a mantle be thrown over him, so that, as they passed through the decks, he might not be recognized, lest his crew should lose heart in the desperate struggle. Around him, in the moment of death and of victory, stood a few of his faithful officers waiting for his spirit to take its flight. It was at Southsea that the hero had embarked to fight the enemies of his country. The spot is now marked by one of the "Victory's" old anchors; and to the same spot, later, came the returning boats in solemn procession, one of them bearing the remains of the hero of Trafalgar. What a contrast! England can well afford generous honors to such a naval chief.—W. Thornton Parker, M. D., in St. Nicholas.

—"Are you going to Newport next summer?" asked one actress of another. "No; I don't think I will. I can't afford it." "Can't afford it? Why, you have made over $25,000 so far this season." "Yes, I know; but you seem to forget that I have a husband to support."—Puck.

Louisville, Ky.—Mr. J. Helmus, Vice President of the City Brewery, was brought home in a wagon, carried up two pair of stairs by two of his men and laid on the bed. He was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism contracted in the ice vaults of the brewery. He refused to have a doctor, but dispatched a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result that in one week he was entirely cured and able to return to his desk.

"Mothers Should Note This."

Under this caption an old physician writes to a Cincinnati Medical Journal, that in view of the fact that people living at a distance from cities are frequently obliged to resort to cough mixtures already put up for use, they should provide themselves with only such remedies as are known to be free from opiates, poisons and narcotics; thus avoiding not only danger, but even fatal results. He recommends the recently discovered Red Star Cough Cure which analyses and tests by various Boards of Health proved to be purely vegitable as well as prompt, effective and entirely harmless.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES WOMEN.
ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

REDUCED RATES ON LEGAL PRINTING.

A bill to reduce the rates for publishing legal notices and advertisements from 70 and 35 to 50 and 25cts., introduced by Mr. McNabb, passed the house committee of the whole last week. Mr. Hampton endeavored to have all after the enacting clause stricken out, and in support of his motion to that effect said the passage of the bill would greatly damage all the newspapers in the state and do good to none except lawyers who speculate in legal costs. He said that the country printers asked no favors, but he could see no reason why the men who elected the members should be specially singled out by those members as objects of attack.

Among the defenders of the bill was representative Howell of this county. The newspapers are commenting in rather vigorous language upon this action and they have good grounds therefor. The rates are now low enough to afford any margin for profit. We venture to say that the cutting of legal rates is rarely indulged in, and only when the poverty of an estate renders such a course excusable. We append the comments of the Adrian Times and Record on the subject and respectfully refer the same to the worthy representative from this district. They reflect the sentiments of the HERALD exactly.

Adrian Times: The bill to reduce the rates for publishing legal notices now pending in the legislature, ought not to pass. The present rate leaves but little margin for profit to the publisher, and the reduction proposed would cut that down to about starvation point. Representative Howell, of this county, favored the proposed reduction, and used as an argument the alleged fact that Adrian and Jackson papers cut the present rates, and contended that "if they can do that and make a profit, why, certainly, we ought to pass the bill and relieve the people." It would be the fair thing for Representative Howell to find out whether at "the cut rates" the papers have any profit for their work. The Times cannot speak for the papers of Jackson, or for any other than itself in Adrian, but so far as this paper is concerned it does not "cut legal rates." There have been cases, and no doubt will continue to be cases, where estates are poor, and little is left for the widow or orphans. The Times, in cases of that sort, has made donation of part of its bill for legal printing, but if an act of charity is to be thus misconstrued to its prejudice, in justice to itself the paper would be compelled to be less charitable.

Record: The bill passed the committee of the whole, but if it passes the house the next committee of the whole the house has will not be composed of the men who now compose it, if the newspapers have any spirit. Except in large cities no newspaper man ever yet grew wealthy out of the publishing business, and the average country editor just about scrapes through by doing most of his own work and wearing poor clothes. The rates allowed by the law for legal advertising are not too much and not any more than business men pay for advertising. Without any just cause or provocation there are men in the legislature who would reward the men who did most to elect them by attempting to rob them. The friends of the bill may prepare for permanent retirement from the legislative halls at Lansing.

The University of Michigan is again in luck. It is to receive Randolph Rogers's collection of statuary, which is being packed for shipment. The list, as given in a letter, written by the sculptor's wife, contains the following:

Lincoln monument, Seward monument, Michigan monument, Rhode Island monument, bas-relief of General Grant, bas relief of Lincoln, bas-relief of Faragut, bas-relief of Sherman, artillery soldier, calvary soldier, sailor, artillery soldier, sailor, infantry soldier, Jacob and Rachel at the well, statue of John Adams, model of Worcester soldiers' monument, bronze doors at the capitol, Isaac, bas-relief of Jacob and Rachel at the well, model of Michigan monument, model of Lincoln monument, bust of Washington, bust of Lincoln, Cupid breaking his bow, angel on Colt monument, Hartford; Indian group, Attala and Chactas; bill of right, trophy on Richmond monument, night, colonial times, colossal statue of Gen. Lewis, soldiers' monument, Cincinnati; lost Pleiad, Victory, Massachusetts soldiers' monument, colossal statue of Gen. Nelson, justice, revolution, finance, trophy on the Washington monument in Richmond, Ruth gleaning, Somnambula, infant Phyche, bas-relief night and day, Nydia, Truant, Nydia (reduced size), Ruth, bas-relief, victory, union, history, emancipation, bas-relief, flight of the spirit, model of Farragut monument, Indian hunter boy, Indian fisher girl, bas-relief Indian group.

American Agriculturist for June.

This is another of the surpassingly excellent numbers of this valuable periodical, of which each number is a delightful surprise to the reader. The illustrations are most attractive, highly artistic, and at the same time practically useful. The title page picture, by Bennett, is a striking group of cows and a calf at a watering trough. A vignetted plate entitled "June," by Folsom, is a warm and sunny grouping of rural scenes. Three prominent breeds of non-sitting fowls, Leghorns, Crevecoeurs, and Houdans, are discussed and beautifully represented. The Polish Swans of the Central Park, form the subject of an instructive article, and of a picturesque engraving. An article on Carrier Pigeons is illustrated by a portrait of the Champion Homing Bird of England, a silver-dun Antwerp. Two fine horse portraits will gratify horsemen. As usual, this number is replete with handy devices for saving labor, and brief but useful hints upon hundreds of topics. It contains besides, an admirable Barn Plan by D. W. King; illustrations of flowers and plants, of the highest beauty and accuracy; an article by Rev. E. P. Roe on the "Profit in Small Fruits near Large Cities," and convenient and tasteful objects of utility or decoration in the household, while for the boys and girls there is a rare treat in a story by R. M. Stewart about Water and its Ways. "The Doctor" talks about Indian Corn, and there is a clever conceit in the personification of "Will-o'-the-Wisp." Yearly subscription, $1.50; single numbers, 15 cents. 751 Broadway, New York.

The North American Review concludes its seventieth year with its June number. It never had so large a circulation, nor a more brilliant staff of contributors. This number discusses seven topics of vital public interest by no less than fourteen eminent writers, not including the short contributions in "Comments." "Shall Silver be Demonetized?" is answered, pro and con, by three distinguished economists, Sumner, Laughlin and Walker, representing Yale and Harvard Colleges, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "The Tardiness of Justice" is discussed by Judge W. L. Learned, and "Prohibition in Politics" by Gale Hamilton; "The Swearing Habit" by E. P. Whipple, and "French Spoliation Claims" by Edward Everett. The policy of the Roman Catholic heirarchy toward our Public Schools is assailed in a learned essay by a new polemic, Mr. M. C. O'Byrne, of North Carolina, and defended by Bishop Keane, of Virginia, with equal erudition. It is a most interesting double presentation of an impending issue. "How Shall Women Dress" is answered by Charles Dudley Warner, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Dr. W. A. Hammond, Dr. Kate. J. Jackson, and Mrs. E. M. King, the English leader of the dress reform movement.

The Magazine of Art.

The Magazine of Art for June has for its frontispiece a "Study of Drapery and Gesture," reproduced in facsimile from a drawing by Edward Burne Jones, and a lengthy and discriminating paper is devoted to this interesting painter by Mr. Claude Phillips. Mr. Phillips admires the unquestionable genius of Burne Jones, which by the way is of the same order as that of our own La Farge, but at the same time he appreciates his short comings. A number of engravings and facsimiles from Burne Jones's most characteristic works are given. "Island and Home," in Sidney Colvin's East Suffolk Memories carry us idly through a beautiful country, over moor and fen, through woods and by the side of silvery streams. There are several full-page illustrations in this number and numerous smaller ones.—Cassell & Company, New York, $3.50 a year.

DEMOREST'S Illustrated Monthly Magazine for June contains a great deal that will interest its readers. It opens with an admirable article, "Bryn Mawr College," which is profusely illustrated, and which fully describes this new college for women in Pennsylvania. "Old Antwerp" which is also illustrated, is another readable article, and so is "Through Normandy by Diligence." The serial, "A Strange Girl," is concluded; and Jennie June contributes a paper on "Trained Nurses and Nursing." These articles, with others of a miscellaneous nature, poems, fashions, and various departments make up a remarkably good number of this admirable magazine. The frontispiece is a fine oil picture, "Butterflies."

Every one who reads knows of Dr. E. Cobham Brewer's reference books and will be pleased to learn that new editions of them, revised and corrected, are about to be brought out. Messrs. Cassell & Company have made arrangements to publish "The Reader's Hand-book," and "The Dictionary of Miracles," uniformly with the "Dictionary of Phase and Fable." They will be bound in cloth, with leather backs, and sold separately or together in a box.

Several candidates were given the right hand of good fellowship last Sunday morning at the M. E. church.

Last Monday was the anniversary of Norwegian independence, and was generally celebrated by the Norwegians in this country.

Mrs. M. A. Freeman received this morning an immense stock of fine millinery goods in addition to her already large assortment.

Overseers' receipts for highway labor, kept in stock at the HERALD office, or blanks of any style printed to order on short notice.

We erroneously stated last week that the complaint against Dr. Geo. Ferguson was made by John Hibbard. The complaint was made by the marshal, James Moir.

Mr. Brownell and Mr. Hamilton, two of the newly elected directors of the Clinton Woolen Mill, were in Tecumseh on Tuesday, and paid their respects at the HERALD sanctum.

From a late number of "The Comrade" we clip the following complimentary notice. Mrs. Elliott was formerly Miss Minnie Spaulding, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Spaulding, of Tecumseh.

Mrs. Minnie Elliott, the accomplished wife of Comrade Elliott, of the Veteran Club, a member of the Jas. A. Mulligan Relief Corps, has acquired a most enviable reputation by her finished and perfect recitations given at several entertainments of the Grand Army Relief Corps and Sons of Veterans. Mrs. Elliott has studied her profession with unusual dilligence and perseverance, and always with the best masters. This lady's presence before an audience is exceedingly graceful and unassuming; she is entirely free from the mannerisms that are so characteristic of the majority of elocutionists. Her repertoire is varied and embraces the many phases of declamation.

At a recent concert at Batavia, she was accorded quite an ovation by her many friends. She read at the last concert of the Union Veteran Club and easily carried off the honors of the evening. We are assured that her great abilities will eventually place her at the head of her profession in this city.

THE GLAD WEDDING BELLS.

The beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Strong was, on Thursday evening last, the scene of a happy social event. At that time their daughter, and only child, Hattie, was united in marriage to Dr. B. F. Snyder. The nuptial ceremony was performed at six o'clock by Rev. W. H. Babbitt in the presence of a few near friends, and between the hours of seven and ten o'clock a reception was tendered to a very large company. For four hours their commodious residence was literally overflowing with guests, assembled to pay their respects and congratulations to the newly married couple. Refreshments were served during the entire evening. Mr. Molton, a celebrated caterer of Toledo, superintended this part of the entertainment, and it is needless to say that his task was admirably performed and it was no easy one, for more than two hundred and fifty guests were provided for. The array of wedding gifts was elegant and costly, and evinced the high esteem in which the bride and groom were held by those who know them best. Chief among these was a check for $1000 presented by the bride's father. Thus start upon life's journey a worthy husband and wife. The bride has lived in Tecumseh all her life, and has always been a favorite in our social circles. The groom came here from Hillsdale about three years since and opened a dental office. Since coming here he has built up a lucrative business and is already looked upon as one of our most substantial business men. May the merry ringing of the wedding bells continue to reverberate music for them through a long and prosperous life.

Supervisor Bresie, who is also sexton of the Tecumseh Cemetery, requests all owners of lots therein, to assist him in a general cleaning up of the cemetery before Decoration Day. If private owners would expend a little work upon their own lots, the cemetery could be put in fine shape for that day. The request is reasonable and we hope it may be very generally complied with.

Adrian Record: An imprudent Hudson man offered two young men a $10 pair of boots each if they would attend church every Sunday for a year. He didn't think they would but they did, and made affidavit of it, claiming the boots. The man is sorry but must "taw over." But the saddest part of it is that the young men say they wouldn't do it over again for all the boots in Hudson.

Following is the program of the Lenawee County Teachers' association, at the meeting to be held May 23, at Adrian:

Penmanship in district schools, by J. B. Tenbrook, Fairfield, 1:30 p. m.

The teacher, and his labor and his reward, W. E. Tripp, Weston, 2:30 p. m.

Discussion after each paper. Teachers and all who are interested, are cordially invited to attend.

It is said "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty;" indeed it seems to be the price of any and everything worth having. Our beautiful cemetery grounds are suffering from the ravages of worms that have completely destroyed the green turf in large patches, and these spots look like blemishes in a fire-scourged meadow. Many of the hitherto beautiful family plats will have to be re-goddad or resown, as not a vestige of vitality is left in the roots where the worm has attacked the grass. The ground mole is also playing havoc in the grounds, burrowing across plats, and for long distance beneath the walks and alleys. Winter has told badly on many of the fine dwarf evergreens.—Hudson Post.

Hillsdale will celebrate the 4th this year.

John T. Finch, of Dundee, was in town last Friday.

Chas. Arnold of Adrian, was over on Tuesday visiting his brother Will.

W. James Hastings, returned home from the University on Monday last.

Mrs. M. A. Freeman is selling the finest bonnets and hats at very low figures.

Hon. T. F. Moore is delivering his New Orleans lecture before several of the county grange.

Chas. Patterson is in Adrian this week helping to close out the Lee boot and shoe stock.

Ladies, remember that Mrs. M. A. Freeman has the finest stock of millinery goods ever displayed in Tecumseh.

John A. Logan was elected U. S. Senator by the Illinois legislature last Tuesday. The long agony is thus over.

J. J. Daly has removed the rest of his Adrian bankrupt shoe stock to Tecumseh where he will close it out at once.

Rev. J. M. Getchell will deliver the oration on Decoration Day at Corry Pa., his old home. Mr. Getchell is a member of the Corry G. A. R. Post.

Ladies, be sure and call on Mrs. M. A. Freeman when in want of Millinery goods. Her stock is complete and her prices are way down. She has one of the best trimmers in the state.

Henry Smith has been treating his dwelling to a new dress of paint, and it looks grand. Daglish did the work and that of itself is enough to convince the public that it is well done.

The Adrian bicycle club, consisting of I. H. Finch, C. G. Wiesinger, James Hedges, H. M. Judge, C. E. Munn, Chas. Meyerhuber, W. H. Burnham and Geo. Bowerfind, rode over to Tecumseh last Sunday on their wheels, arriving in town about three o'clock, in time to take dinner at the Patterson house. The young men are all experts in the use of the "byke," and make a fine appearance when riding together.

Adrian Times: Col. Eldredge returned from Washington Saturday evening. He was seen by a representative of this paper this morning, when inquiry was made in regard to the minor postoffices about the county. The colonel replied that, while he had made a number of recommendations, he did not feel it desirable to mention them, as yet, as they had not been acted upon.

The new Commissioner of Agriculture charges that in the seed department there has been waste and mismanagement. He has beet seed enough to last for three years, and is loaded up heavily with peas and sorghum seed for which extravagant prices were paid, as high as $7 a bushel for the former and $2.95 a bushel for the latter. The seed department seems to have been as well managed as a number of other departments under the late administration.

Adrian Times: It is now a settled fact that Adrian is to have an electric light plant. Contracts are executed and the necessary machinery ordered, which will soon be here. This has been quietly brought about by persons who mean business, and there will be no failure about it. The plant is to be of the Thompson & Houston system, which embraces all of the "Sawyer-Mann patents," some fifty in number, covering every feature of the science, both as to arc and incandescent lights, than which no clearer or steadier light exists.

Capt. J. H. Fee has officiated as postmaster of the city of Adrian for twelve years, and we but state a fact well known to all that he has been a most faithful and competent officer. But under the new order of political things he steps out at the close of his present term and makes room for a brother journalist, Willard Stearns of the Press. The Republicans of Lenawee will accept the situation like practical men, and the Democrats will recognize in Mr. Stearns' appointment one entirely fit to be made. As a newspaper man, we have naught but kind words to say of the old regime and we cheerfully endorse the new. We speed the parting and welcome the coming guest.

Miss J. A. Hough has been replenishing her millinery rooms with a large and varied assortment of spring goods and now has one of the finest stocks ever displayed in this village. Summer hats of all sizes, styles and shapes, a fine lot of ornamental feathers and a brilliant array of artificial fruits and flowers. These latter are becoming quite fashionable for hat trimmings and when skillfully arranged produce a most pleasing effect. A full assortment of ribbons is kept on hand, and all other et ceteras to constitute a complete millinery stock. Her goods are also marked at figures to suit the present close times. Our young ladies and old ladies also will do well to inspect her goods and prices before making their spring purchases. She has secured the services of two first-class milliners, Miss Allie Warren and Mrs. S. Millard, who will do their best to please.

A new Singer sewing machine for sale at this office, cheap for cash.

Elmer Hendershott of Ann Arbor College is home for a few days vacation.

Dr. E. Hause was in town yesterday circulating around among his Tecumseh friends.

Messrs. B. Powell, H. W. Bartlett and F. L. Nixon of Adrian were in town last Sunday.

P. L. & C. D. Sword will remove their brick making works from Adrian to Cincinnati. They will manufacture brick and also brick and tile machines.

Temple, McClure & Co. are shipping a car load of finished stuff this week to St. Louis, Mo., for Charles Crane, who is building a fine residence there. Salmon Crane is out there superintending the work.

Spencer's Gallery, over Wright's store is now in full blast and he is having a good run of custom. Mr. Spencer has made his arrangements to be here most of the time himself and the gallery will be open every day to accommodate customers.

Rev. Mr. Wall and Deacon Edwin Cook went to Jackson yesterday as representatives of the Franklin Church to the state Congregational Association, which began its sessions last evening and will sit until next Sunday. This is the twenty-first state association which Deacon Cook has attended.

Precisely at nine o'clock Tuesday evening, at the rink, Frank Burtis of Hillsdale and Nelson Aten of this village toed the mark for one a mile race. The boys were about evenly matched as regards age and weight, but young Burtis was the more agile of the two, and took the lead at the start and kept there till the finish, winning by about half a lap. Time 4:55.

Mr. Nathan Smith of this city, read an item in the Times, to the effect that S. B. Knapp, of Lowell, Kent county, puts in a claim to have resided in this state longer than any other white man now living. Mr. Knapp claims to have settled in Oakland county in April, 1826. Mr. Smith settled in the same county in November, 1820, and Mr. Knapp will have to take a back seat.—Adrian Times.

Both Mr. Knapp and Mr. Smith must take a back seat. W. W. Bliss, of this village, first saw this terrestrial sphere in Monroe county in 1817, and has lived in the state ever since.—Blissfield Advance.

Prof. and Mrs. Hubbard closed their voice school last Thursday evening, giving entire satisfaction to the class. By a unanimous vote it was decided to have another term next fall, and the following committee was appointed to take the matter in charge: J. S. Temple, M. P. Brown, Mrs. C. H. Gainsley, Mrs. Fred Rosecrans, Mrs. A. W. Mills, Mrs. L. I. Bidwell, Irvin S. Osborn, B. F. Steinhoff, Mrs. Dr. Fisher, Dr. R. B. House. This committee invite all who feel interested in this work to meet at the residence of C. H. Gainsley next Monday evening at 8 o'clock sharp. Bring your books.

Clinton Local: Last Friday was a regular jubilee day on the telephone line. A pole fell some-where between here and Tecumseh, and a passer by, to place the wires out of harm's way, in some way crossed them and the effect was delightful. Every time a bell rang, it attracted the attention of a regular brigade of operators, and was indeed a picnic for any person to find out who was who or which was which, and the only way we could distinguish the good natured Mina from that perfect pattern of patience, at Tecumseh, was by the color of their hair. Their smoothness was certainly crossed almost as much as the wires and May was almost vexed!

W. T. Eccles, of this village, has perfected arrangements for going into the tea business on an extensive scale. He buys his teas direct from New York brokers in large lots at wholesale prices and can retail them at lower figures than were ever before offered in this vicinity. He is now filling up his store with a large stock. His establishment will be known hereafter as the "New York Tea Store." In addition to his local trade he will send out a man or two on the road to take orders among the farmers for his teas. Mr. Eccles is one of our best young business men and the farmers can rely upon honorable dealing in all their transactions with him.

JOSHUA GUMBO'S GARDEN.

Mrs. Gumbo devoted her leisure moments last week—after the garden question had been definitely settled—to making out a list of flower and vegetable seeds. A five dollar order was bought on Monday morning, and the letter has probably reached its destination ere this. Since Monday Jerusha has been making out a plot of the garden, showing the different beds and alleys, and marking the location of each different kind of vegetable and flower, as an architect would draft the plans of a new house. Meanwhile Joshua has become greatly interested in the scheme, and has busied himself in procuring the necessary labor and materials; with the understanding of course that Mrs. Gumbo should foot the bills.

Last evening, after the supper dishes had been cleared away, and Joshua's crippled finger had been ornamented with a fresh poultice, the two sat down to compare notes and arrange the details for manufacturing a garden.

"I procured a copy of "Downing's Landscape Gardening" at the Library last Saturday evening, Joshua, and have been perusing it with especial reference to our necessities. It will be impossible for us to have an artificial pond on the front lawn with Toulouse geese swimming upon its placid surface, nor can we feast our eyes upon the South American cactus, or bask in the umbrageous shade of the Mexican palm, but we can indulge in a pretty cobble stone walk laid in a graceful curve from the front door step to the locality in the sidewalk where the front gate ought to be. We can adorn either side of the walk with a row of marigolds and violets, and lay out circular posy beds on the lawn. Don't you remember the old top phaeton, Joshua, in which we used to enjoy many a cosy ride in the years gone by, when we built so many beautiful air castles as we rode past the old mill and beneath the stately maples upon father's farm? The phaeton has gone the way of the "One-hoss shay" but the tires of the four wheels lie rusting in the thistle patch in the back yard. These can be planted on the lawn, and the space within set with tulips and pansies and poppies and forget-me-nots. The small fruits and vegetables, of course, must not be neglected. The onion patch will be given the post of honor in the center of the garden. I have allotted a nice bed for a few mammoth reds, and have reserved a double portion for the extra concentrated colossal silverskin. A strawberry bed must be planted. I prefer the Bidwell for early and the Kentucky for late bearing. Peas and beets and beans, lettuce and melons and squash, pumpkins, potatoes and carrots will perfume the air and load our table with all the delicacies of the season. I feel, Joshua, that a new era is dawning in our domestic affairs and that life may be well worth living, after all."

"Well, Jerusha, your head's level at last. I kin see that. You kin plan out plans like a house afire. You kin draft plots like a swivel engineer. You kin lay out the beds 'n sling the curves, 'n round the square corners 'n put on the scollops, 'n putty up the cracks, 'n lay on the fringe, but when it comes to doing the work, Jerusha, then call on me. Why, hang it, I haint been so stirred up clear down to the bottom since the night of the quiltin' bee. Now then, I'll jist uncork my tool chest and show you a little farmin' machinery that 'll make yer eyes bung out."

Having lighted the lantern, Mr. Gumbo piloted Jerusha to the woodshed, opened the lid of a huge tool chest and produced his gardening utensils.

"Thar, Jerusha, is a spade what is a spade. The bottom is shaped like a cork screw 'n the top 's hung like a hay fork. It'll dig a hole five feet deep in jist three minutes. We kin plant our beets 'n carrots with that spade, and they'll grow a tap root on 'em ten foot long. And, Jerusalum, look at that rake. It's got four rows o teeth and two handles, one pointin each way. It'll take two men to run that rake, one on each side, like cuttin wood with a cross cut saw. And, hang it, look at that hoe. That hoe, Jerusha, is a new inwention o' mine. I never seen nothin like it in this world and never expect to in the world to come. I shall get a patent on't sure. It has ten blades hitched on to an axletree, like the wings of a wind-mill. Why, hang it, it'll hoe more 'n ten times as much hoin in one day as an ord'nary hoe. That chest on top holds the main spring and it winds up like a watch. That rudder atween the handles is to steer it with. I kin wind up that air hoe and set it a goin' and it'll travel over the hull gardin in fifteen minutes. It'll mow down weeds like a prairie fire, and it'll cultiwate onions better 'n a dozen hoss cultiwaters. I kin sit on the hoss block, Jerusha, and hoe the hull gardin every night after supper. That hoe'll do the business, Jerusha, and when the wegitables gits big enough to market, we kin sell 'em 'n the money 'll come rollin in and then I'll start a factory and manufacture them hoes, and folks 'll buy more hoes 'n more hoes, and the business 'll grow bigger 'n bigger, 'n the spondulix 'll keep comin in, 'n comin in, and Gumbo's name 'll become a household byword by the side of old McCormicks. But the first thing is to grow our wegetables. We'll ha[illegible] st knock the socks off n a[illegible] in this Injun town, or my name ain't Joshua, you bet.

Our garden, Jerusha, will be a surprise;
It will make all the neighbors just open their eyes.
The ground will be plowed, then at work we will go
With our patent spring-action automaton hoe.

We'll have cabbage and celery to astonish the people;
And pretty posy flowers as well as a steeple.
To the sunflowers, and the asters, and browallias, we will show
The work of our patent automaton hoe.

We'll have flower and vine, berry and onion;
On setting seeds in the soil, they will grow with a rush.
For the work of a week, we'll in one day be stow,
With our patent spring-action automaton hoe.

With turnips and taters our larder we'll fill,
And sweet-scented flowers will their sides distil
Of pinks and of pinns, we'll have row upon row,
To be tilled with our patent automaton hoe.

We'll have puddings and pastry and cookies and pies
And feast upon artichokes up to our eyes;
While the front posy garden in beauty will glow
With the touch of our patent automaton hoe.

Each nook of the garden, each alley and bed
Will be gay as a carpet with flowers o'erspread;
The weeds 'll be slaughtered, the weg'tables grow,
When tilled with our patent automaton hoe.

When the crops come to bearing, we'll then take our ease,
And revel in melons, and onions and peas;
With beauty and fragrance our home will o'erflow,
On account of this patent automaton hoe.

The hard times may come, but they can't make us wince,
With our own garden sass, we can live like a prince;
O'er a garden, the best in the town, we can crow;
All made with our patent automaton hoe.

CONFIRMATION SERVICES.

Bishop Samuel S. Harris D. D., of this diocese, conducted services at St. Peter's church last Tuesday evening, at which time the rite of confirmation was administered to a class of seven members. The church was filled with a delighted audience, the music was excellent and the service impressive. The Bishop was assisted by the Rector and the Rev. Jos. St. John of Clinton. The Bishop's discourse was a masterly effort. He speaks without notes, and yet his sermons are as finely rounded and as elaborate in diction as though read from a carefully prepared manuscript. He has a commanding pulpit presence, and an easy impressive manner of delivery. In both matter and manner, his sermons are models of pulpit oratory. At the close of the services, the congregation repaired to the rectory, where an informal reception was tendered to the Bishop, and many of our citizens had the pleasure of forming his acquaintance. Ice cream and cake were served, which fitly terminated an evening of profit to the church and enjoyment to the participants.

The following is a list of the soldiers buried in the cemeteries at Clinton: S. B. Goodrich, 3d Mich. Cav.; Reuben D. St. John, Co. E, 4th Mich. Cav.; Geo. W. Pratt, Co. E, 55th Ohio Inf.; Chas. S. HE FELL IN THE STREETS.
What is gravel? What causes it, and who are most liable to it? It is frequently attended with acute pain, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and all ages are liable to it, although men who have passed the prime of life are its most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter selected from many similar communications:
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March, 1884.
DR. DAVID KENNEDY,
Dear Sir—You have a right to know, and I desire the public to know my experience with Gravel and my remarkable recovery through the use of "Favorite Remedy." I am a carpenter by trade, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away and I had little more trouble until last July, 1883. One day when at work on my scaffold I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said "I can do nothing for you. Your case is incurable." I was frightened and went to the second, who said little but gave me a prescription. It did no good.
Then began a series of experiences the agony and horror of which words cannot depict. Think of it, I was sometimes taken in the street, and would fall within with agony upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven I then heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," through Mr. P. P. Cooley. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms generally abated, and I have no more trouble since. I am well, thanks to your "Favorite Remedy."
Yours most gratefully,
JAMES D. KENNEDY.
What "Favorite Remedy" did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.
